Debate gets feisty, town hall style

By Steve Peoples and David Espo

Candidates challenge each other on foreign policy, economy

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — An aggressive President Barack Obama accused challenger Mitt Romney of favoring a "one-point plan" to help the rich in America and playing politics with the recent deadly terrorist attack in Libya in a Tuesday night debate crackling with energy and emotion just three weeks before the election.

Romney pushed back hard, saying the middle class "has been crushed over the last four years," that 23 million Americans are struggling to find work and that the death of the U.S. ambassador to Libya was part of an unraveling of the administration's foreign policy.

The president was feistier from the outset than he had been in their initial encounter two weeks ago, when he turned in a listless performance that sent shudders through his supporters and helped fuel a rise by Romney in opinion polls nationally and in some battleground states.

Obama and Romney disagreed, forcefully and repeatedly — about taxes, measures to reduce the deficit, energy, pay equity for women and health care as well as foreign policy across 90 minutes of a town-hall style debate.

Immigration prompted yet another clash, Romney saying Obama had failed to pursue the comprehensive legislation he promised at the dawn of his administration, and the president saying Republican obsti-

The practice is a long tradition at the 37-year-old workshop with participants anxiously awaiting the countdown to see who they will be photographing for the week. Photojournalism students and professionals from around the country descend on a Kentucky town every fall to document the lives of people living there. The workshop is conducted by Western Kentucky University's photojournalism program.

Organizer says new law may end Ski Day

'Unless Donald Trump flies in'

By Frank Boyett

Henderson Fiscal Court unanimously passed final reading of an ordinance Tuesday that the organizer of Ski Day said will likely mean the end of the popular boating event.

Members of fiscal court said they hope that doesn't happen. The ordinance originally began as a way to set up an advisory parks board, but then expanded to regulate large events on private property that are expected to draw more than 500 people. Such events would be required to get a permit from the judge-executive and provide plans for such things as security and clean-up operations.

Rick O'Daniel of Evansville, who founded Ski Day in 1979, expressed reservations about how much the new regulatory framework would cost.

"Can you all work with the permit?" Magistrate Carter Wilkerson asked him.

"I don't know," O'Daniel replied. "Unless it just starts raining money out of the sky this event is over. I'd have to get all new sponsors. This is the death knell for the event, I'm afraid, unless Donald Trump flies in."

When County Attorney Steve Gold asked O'Daniel what specific objections he had to the ordinance, he replied that he's worried about how much it might cost to reimburse the sheriff's office for overtime deputies work providing security for the event at Scuffletown beach. Gold conceded that the ordinance would allow the county to recoup those costs.

"If it's going to cost me $5,000, I can't afford it," O'Daniel said. "I have a real dilemma on how to fund it" and recent unfavorable publicity will make it more difficult to get additional sponsors.

O'Daniel was upset with the tone of the last fiscal court meeting and particularly by statements made earlier by Sheriff Ed Brady. O'Daniel said he feels "blindsided" by them because he said he has always worked well with the sheriff's department.

The vast majority of those who attend simply have a good time, O'Daniel said, although he conceded that Ski Day is "not a family-oriented event," lacks portable restrooms and that underage drinking occurs because there is no way to force those attending to present proof of age.

The sheriff reiterated his past statements: "Ski Day is not what it was in 1979," Brady said. "It's getting where it's not the clean fun it used to be." He said people have simulated sex acts on the stage, and if any of them are minors that would be a crime.

But more importantly, he said, "if it's not supervised — and it hasn't been — somebody's going to get hurt." Clean-up of cans and other rubbish is not adequate, he said, in that such things as vomit, urine, fecal matter, blood and other materials that could pose biohazard risks are still present on the beach after the event.

The bottom line, the sheriff said, is that it's not

Jailer opposed to early release program

Since House Bill 463 was signed into law last year, roughly 11,000 Kentucky felons have been released early.

In speaking to the Henderson City Lion's Club Tuesday, Jailer Ron Herrington said that of the early releases, statistics show that "one out of every 10 will return" to jail.

With the early inmate releases, he said, "The state of Kentucky is saving money on state inmates, but they're passing the cost down to the county jails.

"In my professional opinion, I'm against House Bill 463. I'm against putting felons on the streets early, and I'm against the state saving money at the counties' expense," Herrington said.

The Henderson County Detention Center is one of just a few in the Commonwealth "running in the black," he said.

Labor council to honor three at event

Gleaner staff

The Tri-County Council of Labor will honor two Henderson area residents and present a scholarship at its 16th Annual Community Service Awards this Saturday.

The council holds this annual event to recognize adult and youth volunteers who donate numerous hours of community service.

The youth recipient will be 9-year-old Joshua Christian, a fourth-grader at Niagara Elementary School.

In first grade he collected and sent more than 1,000 jars of peanut butter to Haiti after its massive earthquake in 2010, according to Niagara primary teacher Kim Christian. The next year he collected and delivered more than 500 blankets for area homeless people, while in third grade he collected more than 1,000 pairs of shoes for distribution to the needy in Appalachia in a project he called the Shoeperbowl.

This past summer Joshua volunteered at the Humane Society where he walked dogs and played with dogs, cleaned the cat room and took pets to PetSmart on Saturdays to help them get adopted.

"Some nights he can't sleep due to his thinking about dogs without home, or homeless people (out in the) cold or soldiers at war far away from home," Christian wrote.

The second recipient will be the Rev. Anthony Shonis Of Holy Name of Jesus Catholic Church.

Social Security benefits get a 1.7 percent bump

By Stephen Ohlemacher
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – More than 56 million Americans on Social Security will get raises averaging $19 a month come January, one of the smallest hikes since automatic adjustments for inflation were adopted in 1975, the government announced Tuesday.

Much of the 1.7 percent increase in benefits could get wiped out by higher Medicare premiums, which are deducted from Social Security payments.

At the same time, about 10 million working people who make more than $110,100 will be hit with a tax increase next year because more of their wages will be subjected to Social Security taxes.

The cost-of-living adjustment, or COLA, on payments is tied to a government measure of inflation released Tuesday. It confirms that inflation has been relatively low over the past year, despite the recent surge in gasoline prices.

Social Security recipients received a 3.6 percent increase in benefits this year after getting none the previous two years.

"The annual COLA is critically important to the financial security of the (56) million Americans receiving Social Security benefits today," said Nancy LeaMond, AARP's executive vice president. "Amid rising costs for food, utilities and health care and continued economic uncertainty, the COLA helps millions of older Americans maintain their standard of living, keeping many out of poverty."

Social Security payments average $1,131 a month, or $13,572 a year. A 1.7 percent increase amounts to a $19 increase each month, or about $230 a year.

Payments for retired workers are a little higher on average, about $1,237, so the typical increase will be slightly larger.

Disabled workers get a little less on average, about $1,111 a month, so their typical increase will be a little smaller. Social Security also provides benefits to millions of spouses, widows, widowers and children.

About 8 million people who receive Supplemental Security Income, the disability program for poor people, will also receive the COLA.

In all, the increase will affect about one in five U.S. residents.

Since 1975, the annual COLA has averaged 4.2 percent. Only five times has it been below 2 percent, including the two times it was zero.

Before 1975, it took an act of Congress to increase Social Security payments.

"While this modest increase will help, much of the COLA will be consumed by health care and prescription costs, which continually outpace inflation," LeaMond said.

Medicare Part B premiums, which cover doctor visits, are expected to rise by about $7 per month for 2013, according to government projections.

Since the premiums are deducted from Social Security payments, that would eat up more than a third of the average COLA.

City to release rainbow trout in state fisheries

The Indiana Department of Natural Resources is releasing 550 catchable-sized rainbow trout into the lake at Evansville's Garvin Park, and state fisheries personnel will be on hand 1 to 5 p.m. Saturday to provide equipment, bait and instruction on how to catch them.

Anyone age 16 and younger does not need a state fishing license or trout stamp. Those age 17 or older do.

A part of the fisheries department's urban fishing program, the hope is the trout will all be caught out of the lake before warm weather returns next spring. Trout are cold water fish, and the Garvin Park lake is too shallow to provide them a sustainable habitat.

For more information on the program, call fisheries biologist Dan Carnahan at 812-789-2724.

DUBOIS COUNTY, IND.

Historical Society to hold meeting, program

The Dubois County Historical Society will meet at 6:30 p.m. Thursday at the Happy Hour Sports Bar & Grill, 6679 E. State Road 164, Celestine, IN. A dinner will be served, followed by a business meeting and a program about Capt. John Jacob Alles of Celestine, who fought in the Civil War.

Jasper, Ind., resident Tom Alles will speak about his great-great-grandfather, a German immigrant, who was elected captain of Co. I, 49th Indiana Volunteers. Capt. Alles wrote letters home in German during the war. These letters have been translated into English and given to the Dubois County Museum. After the war, he served many years as trustee of Hall Township and as county commissioner of Dubois County. Although bothered by his war injuries, he lived to be 87 years old, dying in October, 1911.

The public is invited to attend meeting. The cost of the meal is $12. Reservations are due by Thursday. For reservations, contact Mary Ann Hayes at 812-482-2847 or at mhayes@duboiscountymuseum.org, or Fred Clark at 812-482-5203.

Don't let Benghazi facts get in the way of political fighting

Successive generations of White House staffs and newspaper editors relearn the same hard lesson: Don't get ahead of the facts.

The initial White House reaction to the attack on the U.S. consulate in Benghazi, which cost the lives of our ambassador and three others, was that it was a spontaneous response to an amateurish video made in the United States that purportedly ridiculed Islam.

The U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Susan Rice, amplified that explanation five days later in a round of talk shows. But Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., said the White House knew within 24 hours that it was an orchestrated attack by a terrorist militia, one possibly affiliated with al-Qaida.

If it was a deliberate misrepresentation, as Graham charges, it was a dumb idea — not that dumb ideas are unknown in Washington — because the details were bound to leak out over time.

The White House may have been afraid of losing control of what is now called in Washington-speak "the narrative" and, with the FBI unable to get to the ruined consulate for three weeks, unwilling to wait for all the facts to begin emerging.

Unfortunately for the truth and possibility of preventing a recurrence, this controversy comes at a time when politics colors everything.

To put the worst possible face on it, the GOP may have been trying to take down Rice, a rising star in the Obama administration and a rumored successor to Hillary Clinton, and to tarnish an Obama success, the overthrow of Libyan dictator Moammar Gadhafi.

Republicans derided the plan until the day Gadhafi was finally killed.

Republicans blamed the White House for ignoring clear warnings of an imminent attack; the White House responded that the Republicans had cut $300 million in diplomatic security funding.

None of this sparring is at all helpful.

It is the responsibility of the host country to protect foreign diplomats and embassies, but that's difficult in the extreme in countries that have no governments or, in the case of Libya, not much of one.

As a practical matter, the U.S. cannot retreat into fortress-like embassies; that defeats the whole purpose of having wingtips on the ground, so to speak — the attaches, the specialists and, yes, the spooks who are eyes and ears in foreign countries.

Unfortunately, a certain amount of risk comes with being a foreign service officer in unsettled parts of the world, risks that the diplomats, like their military counterparts, know going in.

Those four Americans who died in Benghazi, and especially Ambassador Chris Stevens, were heroes.

The issue may have been quelled by the secretary of state herself. The formidable Hillary Clinton took responsibility for the deaths and noted that it is she, and not the White House, who is responsible for the security of our diplomatic missions.

With Tooter gone, neither Metzger's nor the East End will be same again

CHUCK STINNETT
BUSINESS EDITOR

Half of the East End of Henderson must have filed through the funeral home Friday evening. At least, half of the old East End.

They were people who remember that old neighborhood when it was a nursery and a kiln — a place that nurtured, and then tested, its young ones.

The East End produced some good 'uns: some square businessmen and good preachers and earnest teachers and a lot of hardworking folks besides.

But it also produced a prince. We knew him as Tooter.

It was 30-odd years ago when I sat down on a stool at Metzger's Tavern, ordered a draft Sterling and a bowl of chili. After paying, I slid a gratuity across the bar to the man who was tending it.

The bartender slid the money back."You don't have to do that here," he said kindly.

A friendship developed over the years. Actually, years passed before I realized that I didn't know my friend's real first or last name. I knew him only as Tooter.

In fact, his name was Billy Leslie and he was one of the most universally liked men I've ever known. For more than 30 years, he worked nights at Metzger's as a second (or third) job — pouring drafts, frying bologna and exchanging quips with a parade of people from all walks of life in what was once a men's-only melting pot.

I had the privilege of writing about Tooter when he retired from Metzger's in June 2001. In his honor and memory, and for the benefit of his countless friends, I'll repeat it here.

It's a spring evening at Metzger's, Henderson's famous East End watering hole. The phone is ringing off the wall; food orders are pouring in. The guys behind the bar are shoulder-to-shoulder, cooking burgers on the grill. It's rush hour.

Busiest of all is the fellow with the red-dusted hair and a white apron pulled tight around his middle. That would be Tooter.

Back in the mid-1960s, the story goes, Tooter kept after then-proprietors Joe Tigue and Don Metzger for a part-time job, without success.

"He came in one night with the Falstaff baseball team," Tigue recalled. "He said, 'Tell the truth — the only reason you won't hire me is, I'm not Catholic.'"

Maybe the bluff worked. Don and Joe, good Holy Name Catholic Church parishioners, finally hired Tooter.

"That was 34 years ago," Tigue said, adding that Holy Name has been through four priests during Tooter's years at Metzger's. "They all adore him."

It's not just men of the collar who like him. As much as anyone I know, Billy "Tooter" Leslie has earned the respect and affection of his fellows.

Tigue motioned with his thumb to a tableful of men. "I'll give you $10 if you can go over there and find anyone to say anything bad about him."

"One of the finest men I've ever known," Metzger told me by phone. "Honest. Trustworthy. Hardworking. A very spiritual person. I don't know anything else you could ever say about a man."

Customers, most of whom have East End roots, appreciate Tooter as a lifelong East Ender.

"He's like a fixture," observed Jerry Hatley [who owned Metzger's at the time].

"He's helped make Metzger's more than Don and I did," Tigue said.

But Tooter has finally hung up his apron.

ICE BOXES AND ICE-COLD MUGS

No one could blame Tooter for wanting a rest (Saturday was his last day). The whole time he's worked at Metzger's, he's held a full-time job at the Whirlpool refrigerator plant in Evansville.

"He's had two jobs his entire life," Tigue said. "For a while, he also delivered bread on Sunday."

Tooter doesn't find this so remarkable. "My wife (Connie), she took care of all our kids," he said. "That was the tough job."

"Tough" is how Tooter himself was once known. Years ago, he was a rawboned scrapper. "As a kid, he'd rather fight than eat," Metzger recalled.

"Tooter would fight a bus," lifelong friend Dutch Herzog laughed.

Those of us who met Tooter later in life find that hard to imagine. Today, his eyes twinkle when he spies a friend; with a toothpick in his mouth and a grin on his lips, he's always ready to tell a joke or to hear one.

"A guy asked me one time," Tooter will say, "that if I were standing in front of Moammar Khadafi, Saddam Hussein and Bobby Knight, and I had a gun with only two bullets, who would I shoot? I said, 'Bobby Knight. Twice.' "

[Then-]Henderson County Judge-executive Sandy Watkins has felt the wrath of Tooter's playfulness.

Once, Watkins promised his mother he'd help her in the garden. But he stopped at Metzger's for lunch and, well, lingered. After awhile, Mama Watkins called Tooter.

"When he got off the phone," Watkins recalled, "Tooter announced to the whole crowd, 'The county judge's mother called, and I promised her that I would watch over her little boy!' "

FROM PATTON TO PITINO

From his vantage point behind the bar, Tooter has seen a variety of dignitaries pass through. "He's met the governor in here, and the lieutenant governor and Rick Pitino," Tigue said.

But you can be sure, Tooter didn't treat them any different, better or worse, than anyone else.

"He's the governor of Metzger's," customer Bud Satterfield proclaimed.

Others commend Tooter's character. "In the 14 years I worked with Tooter," former part-timer John Klein said, "whatever Tooter said to me, in confidence or whatever, it was on the square. You could take it to the bank."

"The only thing you can say is, Tooter is Tooter," fellow bartender Rodney Davis said. "And you can't get any better than that."

Tooter, who didn't want all this fuss made over him, overheard some of these remarks, and rolled his eyes every time. "Whatever he (Tigue) tells you, don't believe it," Tooter said as he walked past.

"It's like the preacher preaching a funeral and saying all these nice things about the dead man," Tooter said later, "until the son finally punched his mother and said, 'Mama, go up and open the coffin and see if that's daddy in there!' "

More than a decade has passed since that column appeared, and too many of the good people mentioned in that old column have passed on. Tooter's wife, Connie, died in 2004. Tooter's boss and dear friend, Joe Tigue, passed away in 2006. Sandy Lee Watkins died suddenly in 2010.

Now, Tooter is gone as well.

I hope that someone at Metzger's respectfully lifted a glass to his memory.

Sec. Clinton takes Libya blame

By Matthew Lee and Bradley Klapper
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton's pre-election bid to shoulder blame over the deadly terror attack in Libya failed to silence GOP criticism that President Barack Obama is not protecting U.S. diplomats overseas.

Her written statement was sure to re-emerge as a prominent issue in Tuesday's second debate between Obama and GOP challenger Mitt Romney, and could have long-term ramifications given the persistent speculation that Clinton might run for president in four years or stay in public life. And it prompted the Obama campaign to say the president joined Clinton in accepting responsibility.

"Every time an American dies abroad, everybody takes responsibility, from the top down," said Stephanie Cutter, Obama's deputy campaign manager. Asked in an interview whether that included Obama, she said: "Absolutely. ... He's the president of the United States."

In her statement, Clinton accepted responsibility for the safety of the State Department's staff and diplomatic missions. It was quickly brushed aside by leading Republicans.

By becoming the first top administration official to assume blame for the attack last month on the U.S. Consulate in Benghazi, Libya, she sought to take the heat off Obama for the worst debacle at a U.S. embassy or consulate overseas in more than a decade. Four Americans, including the U.S. ambassador to Libya, were killed in the Benghazi attack.

But her message left several lingering questions unanswered, such as whether the attack on the 11th anniversary of 9/11 occurred because of intelligence failures and why administration officials insisted for days afterward that the violence stemmed from protests against an American-made video ridiculing Islam.

"I take responsibility," Clinton said, reiterating comments she made in a television interview late Monday. "I'm in charge of the State Department's 60,000-plus people all over the world (at) 275 posts."

Clinton's remarks may have been intentionally vague. Neither in her interviews or her statement does she spell out what exactly she assumes responsibility for, a tactic that may have been employed to avoid culpability for specific failings or tasks strictly outside her control.

Politicians recall Sen. Specter's grit, drive

By Maryclaire Dale
Associated Press

NARBERTH, Pa. – Former U.S. Sen. Arlen Specter was an "irreplaceable" force who approached politics — and life — with grit and determination, a who's who of politicians and others said Tuesday at the longtime senator's funeral.

"I've never seen as much undaunted courage as Arlen had — both physically and politically. He believed he could change the world, if he just worked hard enough at it," Vice President Joe Biden told mourners, including three Pennsylvania governors, federal judges and hundreds of friends, at Har Zion Temple in Narberth, a Philadelphia suburb.

Specter died at his Philadelphia home on Sunday at 82 after battling non-Hodgkin lymphoma.

He had spent 30 years in the Senate before losing his seat in 2010, after crossing party lines to vote for President Barack Obama's stimulus package and later switching parties.

"In a dark time for our nation, he was willing to lose his seat to cast a decisive vote," said Specter's son Shanin, whose remarks capped about 90 minutes of tributes.

Specter, a political moderate, switched parties twice but mostly served as a Republican.

Speakers said he honed his respect for opposing viewpoints as a child, growing up in the only Jewish family in Russell, Kan.

"He really set the standard for working across party lines and we're going to miss that," said Democratic U.S. Sen. Bob Casey.

Specter is also survived by his wife, Joan, son Steve and three other granddaughters.

MAINE

Problems caused by releasing list of johns

KENNEBUNK – Paul Main's quiet evening was shattered by a phone ringing off the hook and a half-dozen TV crews showing up on his porch. Everyone wanted to know: Was he the same Paul Main who's been accused of visiting a prostitute in Kennebunk?

The answer was no. But a decision to release the names of alleged prostitution clients without any ages or addresses has caused big problems for men who have the same names as the accused.

For weeks, rumors about a prostitution business have run rampant. On Monday, authorities released the first batch of names out of more than 150 men accused of paying a Zumba fitness instructor for sex.

The addresses, ages and other identifying information of the johns were withheld after a judge ruled that state law required them to be kept confidential because the alleged sexual encounters may have been videotaped, making the men potential victims of privacy invasion.

On Tuesday, Superior Court Justice Thomas Warren reversed his decision, ruling after a request from The Portland Press Herald that addresses and other information could be released.

Kennebunk police reissued the revised list, which included former South Portland Mayor James Soule and suspects from more than a dozen towns in Maine, as well as one from Boston and another from New Hampshire.

But many media outlets released the first list, causing problems for men like Main, whose name is shared by at least 20 others in Maine alone.

Earth-sized planet close to solar system

WASHINGTON – Astronomers say that just outside our solar system they've found a planet that's the closest you can get to Earth in location and size.

It is the type of planet they've been searching for across the Milky Way galaxy and they found it circling a star right next door — 25 trillion miles away. But the Earthlike planet is so hot its surface may be like molten lava.

The team of European astronomers who found it say it's likely there are other planets circling the same star. And those planets could fit the not-too-hot, not-too-cold description that astronomers sometimes call the Goldilocks Zone.

District questions black-face parody

WAVERLY – A pep rally skit by three white high school students who wore black-face and parodied Chris Brown's arrest for assaulting Rihanna has officials in the New York district vowing to set clearer expectations for school events.

An alumnus, Matthew Dishler, posted a photo from the skit online. He said Tuesday that while he doesn't believe the students meant to offend, he was surprised that administrators didn't intervene.

Superintendent Joseph Yelich said the short skit was one of several pop culture parodies at Friday's pep rally at Waverly High School, near the Pennsylvania border. He says he's using the episode to establish clearer expectations going forward.

A teenage Pakistani girl shot in the head by the Taliban for promoting girls' education has responded well to treatment and impressed doctors with her strength, the British hospital where she was being treated said Tuesday.

Experts are optimistic that 14-year-old Malala Yousufzai, who was flown Monday to Britain to receive specialized medical care, has a good chance of recovery because unlike adults, the brains of teenagers are still growing and can adapt to trauma better.

"Her response to treatment so far indicated that she could make a good recovery from her injuries," the Queen Elizabeth Hospital in central England's Birmingham said in a statement.

90 dead in attacks on rebel areas

The Syrian military unleashed heavy airstrikes and artillery bombardments targeting rebel strongholds in the north on Tuesday, killing at least 90 people according to activists.

The barrage came as the U.N. food agency warned that more and more Syrians are depending on assistance from the World Food Program to stay alive with the civil war worsening.

The airstrikes hit northern Idlib and Aleppo provinces, both bordering Turkey. Activists described them as some of the worst since rebels fighting to topple President Bashar Assad took over the key city of Maaret al-Numan in Idlib on Oct. 10. The city lies along the main highway connecting Aleppo with the cities to the south, including Homs and the capital Damascus.

Top court criticizes draft constitution

Egypt's highest court lashed out Tuesday at an Islamist-led panel tasked with writing the country's new constitution, saying that some provisions proposed for the text undercut the court's mandate and keep it under the president's power.

The work — and the composition — of the 100-member constitutional assembly has been the subject of a fierce debate in Egypt, and the country is still haggling over disputed articles in the charter, some of which will determine the role of religion in the nation's affairs and the independence of the judiciary.

Supporters of the panel drafting the constitution say it was set up by an elected parliament and broadly represents Egypt's political factions. Critics say the process is dominated by a majority made up of Islamists.

Government to let Cubans travel more freely in 2013

By Andrea Rodriguez and Peter Orsi
Associated Press

HAVANA – The Cuban government announced Tuesday that it will eliminate a half-century-old restriction that requires citizens to get an exit visa to leave the country.

The decree that takes effect Jan. 14 will eliminate a much-loathed bureaucratic procedure that has kept many Cubans from traveling or moving abroad.

"These measures are truly substantial and profound," said Col. Lamberto Fraga, Cuba's deputy chief of immigration, at a morning news conference. "What we are doing is not just cosmetic."

Under the new measure announced in the Communist Party daily Granma, islanders will only have to show their passports and visas from the countries they are traveling to.

It is the most significant advance this year in President Raul Castro's five-year plan of reforms that has already had the legalization of home and car sales and a big increase in the number of Cubans owning private businesses.

Migration is a highly politicized issue in Cuba and beyond its borders.

Under the "wet foot, dry foot" policy, the United States allows nearly all Cubans who reach its territory to remain. Granma published an editorial blaming the travel restrictions imposed in 1961 on U.S. attempts to topple the island's government, plant spies and recruit its best-educated citizens.

"It is because of this that any analysis of Cuba's problematic migration inevitably passes through the policy of hostility that the U.S. government has developed against the country for more than 50 years," the editorial said.

It assured Cubans that the government recognizes their right to travel abroad and said the new measure is part of "an irreversible process of normalization of relations between emigrants and their homeland."

The decree still imposes limits on travel by many Cubans. People cannot obtain passports or travel abroad without permission if they face criminal charges, if the trips affect national security or if their departure would affect efforts to keep qualified labor in the country.

Doctors, scientists, members of the military and others considered valuable parts of society currently face restrictions on travel to combat brain drain.

Gitmo war court back in session sans 3 defendants

By Ben Fox

GUANTANAMO BAY NAVAL BASE, Cuba – Three of the five men charged with plotting the Sept. 11 attacks skipped their military tribunal hearing Tuesday after a judge ruled the men could not be forced to attend the session.

Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, the self-professed 9/11 mastermind, was absent as attorneys delved into a dense debate on legal motions, including rules for handling classified evidence at trial.

Mohammed was taken from his cell at the U.S. base in Cuba to a holding cell outside the courtroom, then chose to boycott at the last minute, said a Navy officer whose name was not released by the court for security reasons.

Mohammed, who has previously said he conceived and orchestrated the Sept. 11 attacks, gave no reason for wanting to sit out the hearing but on Monday dismissed the military tribunal with scorn, saying "I don't think there is any justice in this court."

Authorities have portrayed the other defendants as Mohammed's underlings, who provided logistical and other help to the Sept. 11 hijackers. All five face the same charges, which include terrorism and murder, in what is considered one of the most significant terror prosecutions in U.S. history. They all could get the death penalty if convicted at a trial that is at least a year away.

Saudi defendant Mustafa Ahmad al-Hawsawi and Pakistani national Ali Abd al-Aziz Ali, a nephew of Mohammed, also chose to boycott the hearing.

ELECTION 2012

Fewer qualms now about Romney from gun lobby

■ GOP candidate has changed views; Ryan selection a big help

By Brian Bakst
Associated Press

ST. PAUL, Minn. – Gun-rights groups perceive President Barack Obama as a threat to unfettered access to firearms. They once had qualms about Mitt Romney, too.

But times and circumstances have changed for Romney, the GOP presidential nominee now in tune with the National Rifle Association and similar organizations, whose members are motivated voters.

In the tight White House race, every bit of support helps, especially in the most closely contested states and particularly from groups that claim millions of members nationwide.

Romney's prior embrace of weapon-control proposals had put him crossways with the NRA and others. These days, Romney is on their good side by opposing renewal of a federal ban on semiautomatic weapons, additional regulations on gun shows and suggested federal gun registration requirements.

The NRA and some less prominent organizations are spending big money on mailings, radio ads, TV commercials and booths at game fairs to promote the former Massachusetts governor and portray Obama as hostile to gun rights.

Gun groups are an important part of an outdoor enthusiast network that neither side is willing to concede.

There are "Sportsmen for Romney" and "Sportsmen for Obama," all playing to the largely male hook-and-bullet crowd that is protective of recreational passions. Neither candidate is considered an avid outdoorsman, though each has made mention of fishing rods or been photographed casting a line.

Romney and his allies underscore his hands-off stance when it comes to guns, and say he would move to open more public land to hunting. They also promote the bona fides of running mate Paul Ryan, who has a permit for just about every season in Wisconsin, his home state.

Last month, Ryan reminded a gathering of sportsmen in Ohio of the hours he has logged in duck blinds, deer stands, pheasant fields and fishing boats. Then came his critique of Obama: "I wonder, I shudder as a gun owner, seeing his record when he was in the Illinois state Senate, what would he do if he never has to face the voters ever again?"

It's the type of message that resonates with voters such as Stan Glover of Bowerston, Ohio. Glover said Romney's past stands gave him pause, but he's more nervous about Obama.

"The uncertainty of politics in Washington, as regards hunters/gun owner rights, has caused undue fear amongst folks that enjoy the shooting sports," said Glover, a manufacturing plant sales director who plans to vote for Romney.

The Obama campaign emphasizes steps by his administration to promote habitat conservation, set aside land and preserve access to land used for recreation. Supporters point to Obama's "American Great Outdoors Initiative" to coordinate conservation and natural resource efforts in all 50 states, whether it's restoring wetlands in Iowa's duck-rich Prairie Pothole Region or filtering phosphorous harmful to fish and fowl in Grand Lake St. Marys in Ohio.

For Obama, minimizing Romney's apparent advantage among voters who place a premium on outdoors issues is the name of the game.

In Iowa and other states, that task falls to people such as Dick Dearden. He's a Democratic state senator and leader of a group of pro-Obama outdoors enthusiasts working to combat negative portrayals of the incumbent among the shotgun crowd.

"The president is not a threat to people who hunt and fish. He's an asset," Dearden said. "I'm a member of the NRA and they are beginning to more and more embarrass me. I'm a Second Amendment person, but I have not seen anything this president has done for the last four years that has hurt anyone's Second Amendment rights."

Obama's campaign highlights a law he signed in his first year as president that allows people with weapons permits to bring loaded guns into national parks and wildlife refuges. The change drew rebukes from gun-control advocates.

But groups working to defeat Obama sound alarms about his support of reinstating an assault weapons ban if one made it through Congress. They also are stoking fears that the president would use a second term to appoint federal judges with restrictive views toward gun ownership. The Supreme Court has been closely divided in recent gun cases, and the balance could shift if Obama had the chance to pick any new justices.

Romney told the leader of the NRA's lobbying arm in a question-and-answer piece published last month that he would appoint "wise, experienced and restrained judges" and fill his Cabinet with "people who agree that the Second Amendment guarantees a fundamental, individual right."

His own views have shifted from when he ran for the Senate and was governor in Massachusetts. In his failed 1994 Senate campaign he backed a waiting period on gun sales and an assault weapons ban that he said were "not going to make me the hero of the NRA." As governor, he signed a state-level assault weapons ban that he argued was part of a brokered deal between the sides in the gun debate.

In the NRA interview published in September, Romney unequivocally opposed new gun restrictions, including one on semiautomatic weapons. The group endorsed him in Virginia in early October and has since reserved more than $1.3 million in TV ad time in in Florida, Ohio, Virginia and Wisconsin.

Larry Pratt, executive director of Gun Owners of America, acknowledged some hesitancy about Romney but said gun-rights activists were mollified by his selection of Ryan as a running mate.

Supporters of the National Rifle Association (NRA) are prominent in the crowd surrounding Republican presidential candidate and former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney as he campaigns in Fishersville, Va., last week. Romney is on their good side by opposing renewal of a federal ban on semiautomatic weapons, additional regulations on gun shows and suggested federal gun registration requirements.

Flawed safeguards open the door to double voting in two states

By Scott Wkland
Scripps Howard News Service

As the presidential race tightens and the political rivals try to win every vote they can, experts say flawed safeguards could allow people who live in two states to vote twice for their favorite candidate.

Those same double-voters could cast ballots in congressional races in two different states, possibly affecting November's pivotal election when both political parties are vying for control of the U.S. Senate and House.

Double voting is especially a concern in Florida, where an annual flock of part-time residents, known as "snowbirds," have a second home in a different state, giving them the chance to register to vote in two states, according to elections supervisors.

Absentee ballots, which are growing more popular, make it easier to pull off this fraud because the person doesn't need to travel to both places.

The little-noted problem exists largely because there is no national database that enables all states to cross-check registration and voting records, a Scripps Treasure Coast Newspapers investigation has found.

And no easy solutions exist.

In 20 states where officials do match records, thousands of people turned up as possibly double voting during the 2010 general election. But these cross-check systems have a lag time and often don't catch questionable votes until long after an election is over.

With the presidential race and many congressional contests expected to be tight, a few thousand fraudulent votes could affect the outcome of a race, say elections officials, who think the number of people who could vote in two states is far greater than that.

"Having the ability to vote twice in a national election could skew a national election if it's close," said Vicki Davis, Martin County, Fla., supervisor of elections.

Conservative politicians and the media have focused on ways to stop ineligible voters such as illegal immigrants and some felons from casting ballots but have given little attention to double voting.

That is, until last month when Wendy Rosen, a Maryland Democratic congressional candidate, withdrew from the race when her party claimed she voted in Maryland and Pinellas County, Fla., during the 2006 general election and 2008 primaries. Neither Maryland nor Florida authorities have pursued a criminal investigation.

Election supervisors say preventing this type of fraud is paramount because once an unlawful ballot is cast, it can't be reversed, even if the person is convicted of the crime.

"You have no way of figuring out which ballot was theirs," said Leslie Swan, Indian River County supervisor of elections.

Election officials interviewed for this story all agreed a national database would be the best way to curtail this crime.

U.S. Department of Justice officials declined to comment about double voting and whether federal agencies should create a national system to cross-check voter registrations in every state.

In the absence of a national roll, two separate groups of states, with a total of 20 states participating, have begun cross-checking each other's voter registrations.

Since the controversial 2000 presidential election in which ballots were mishandled in Florida, most states have developed policies to keep people from voting in two counties. But the statewide systems so far have done little to deter interstate fraud.

In Florida, for instance, where identification rules are stricter than in many states, determined scammers could skirt the safeguards, elections officials say.

That's because the ID requirements are designed to prove you're who you claim to be — a U.S. citizen allowed to vote — and not whether you're registered in only one state, Swan said.

Elections officials in New York, Illinois and Ohio — states where many Florida snowbirds live part time — describe similar shortcomings.

New York has most of the same registration rules as Florida. Applicants must have valid ID and a utility bill verifying the current address. New York officials notify the applicant's previous county elections office of the new residence, so the person can be removed from that county's voters' rolls.

However, the lack of a national database makes it impossible to check every state where the person could live and be registered to vote, said John Conklin, spokesman for the New York elections board.

"There is definitely an honor system," Conklin said.

Absentee voting can make the double-dipping easier to pull off. A person can request a Florida ballot be mailed to, say, New York, then vote in both states if he managed to double register, voting experts say.

Many states view double voting as a significant problem, and an increasing number have begun teaming up to cross-check each other's voter records.

One consortium has 15 states. Another alliance, being built by the nonprofit Pew Center on the States, includes seven, and successfully flagged Maryland House candidate Rosen as a double voter.

‘Hello, I have cancer, how are you?’

Comic confronts disease head-on in stage act

By Jake Coyle
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A frightfully nervous Tig Notaro stood just offstage at the Los Angeles club Largo while Ed Helms introduced her.

The audience of 300 and Notaro’s fellow performers that August night had no idea what she was about to do. They had no idea she was going to address the trauma and pain that had been the last few months of her life, or relay the bad news she had received just days earlier. They had no idea she was about to perform the bravest set they had ever seen.

“Good evening! Hello. I have cancer. How are you?”

With those words — said cavalierly in the normal stand-up greeting manner — Notaro launched into a 30-minute performance that immediately became legendary in comedy circles and that’s now available as an unlikely live album via a $5 digital release by comedian Louis C.K. In just a week, it’s sold more than 60,000 copies.

The 41-year-old Notaro, a stand-up veteran of 15 years, was in the midst of a string of misfortunes: She had been hospitalized and debilitated by clostridium difficile, her mother had died in a tragic accident, she went through a breakup, and, days earlier, she had learned she had breast cancer.

“It’s weird because with humor, the equation is tragedy plus time equal comedy,” Notaro told a stunned crowd. “I am just at tragedy right now.”

But Notaro’s performance wasn’t a weepy lament. It was matter-of-fact storytelling, filled with heartbreakingly funny observations. It was taking comedy straight into darkness and grief, in the rawest catharsis.

“It felt amazing,” Notaro said in a recent interview, days after moving from Los Angeles to New York. “When I was on stage I felt, ‘Wow, I think something really special is happening.’ ”

The audience — at turns confused, amazed, gasping, saddened, hysterical — cheered her on, some through tears. Among those there that night was Louis C.K., who insisted Notaro release the largely unrehearsed show as a comedy album. He put it out on his website, calling it “one of the greatest standup performances I ever saw.”

“Here was this small woman standing alone against death and simply reporting where her mind had been and what had happened and employing her gorgeously acute stand-up voice to her own death,” C.K. wrote on his website. “She proved that everything is funny. And has to be.”

It took Notaro more than a month to convince herself to release it (mostly because it was so raw and off-the-cuff, like an open-mic performance), but she was eventually swayed by thinking it could help someone. (Part of the proceeds will go to charity.) She dubbed it the typical-seeming title “Live,” but it’s meant to be pronounced as in “to live.”

Notaro was performing that night partly to work out material she had written on her ordeal, having been urged by “This American Life” host Ira Glass, who would later feature her story on the radio program. Just 90 minutes before going on stage, she had thought she would begin by sitting down and laying everything out for the audience. Instead, while showering, she decided such an apologetic opening was “lame” and was seized by maniacal laughter at the thought of beginning as she did: “This is how I’m going to deal with having cancer,” she told herself. She paused, worried that she might offend anyone with cancer, before realizing: “Wait, I have cancer.”

“I just really needed to talk about it,” says Notaro, explaining her mindset at the time.

Notaro is now back from the brink. She had a double mastectomy and doctors believe the cancer has been removed with recurrence unlikely. She finds herself a sensation, and has signed a book deal with Ecco Press. Her first album, “Good One,” is among the best-sellers on iTunes. “I’ve never gone viral before,” she says.

Her stand-up, while personal, hasn’t typically been confessional or dark. Among her most famous routines is a never-ending bit about repeatedly running into ’80s pop star Taylor Dayne. Performing on “Conan,” she also stretched absurdity, spending the majority of her set pushing a stool around the stage.

But now, Notaro realizes a shift has occurred in her comedy and that she can’t return to her old material. “Live” ends with her telling one of her jokes — one about a bee on a highway in Los Angeles — but she’s telling it ironically. After talking about cancer and death, the joke is funny for being so foolish by comparison.

“I cannot imagine — and maybe it’s just a matter of time — doing that kind of material right now,” says Notaro, who hasn’t yet performed since. “I feel a little more reflective and searching. My comedy is beyond me right now.

“I have no idea what’s coming,” she says. “It makes me feel like I’m just starting in stand-up. I feel like I’ve just been born, but I feel like I’ve been born with every tool I need in life. If you had a baby and it was born with all the experience it needed. That’s how I feel.”

I have lost 147 lbs., but most importantly my HEALTH is so much better!!

Steve AFTER

Steve BEFORE

If you think you have health and weight problems and there is no hope for you, that might not be the case. I weighed 397 lbs. and in one year I went on 5 or 6 different diet plans and took classes so that I could meet my insurance company’s requirements to have the Lap Band surgery done. During that year I was put on 280 units of insulin and I only lost 29 lbs. One of my best friends told me about the “Perfect Plan”, so I gave them a call and met with them. Jan was sure she could help me and asked me to give her program a three-month trial period before deciding on the lap band method, which I did. After the first three months I was off my Insulin, Blood Pressure and Cholesterol medicines which were costing over $1500 a month, plus some other medications that I had been taking for over 15 years. Within the next 3 to 4 months I was able to go off more medications and quit using my sleep apnea machine, which I had been on for over 15 years. My insurance company is amazed at all the medicines that I no longer need. I weigh 250 lbs. now, which is great, but my HEALTH is so much better!!!! I feel I’ve lengthened my life. I now have more energy and feel like camping, fishing, walking and doing the things I used to do. That is what The Perfect Plan HAS DONE FOR ME! THANK YOU JAN AND ALL OF YOU AT THE PERFECT PLAN!.

JAILER
from 1A

I think we can get through the next fiscal year, but after that ... it's questionable."

Herrington said within the last several years, the local jail has stayed "ahead of the game" with its finances by adding beds to house state and federal inmates.

The jail receives $31.34 per day per state inmate and around $37 a day per federal inmate, he said.

The county pays $27.90 a day to house a county inmate.

As of Tuesday, the jail's population was 582, he said, with the breakdown being 285 state inmates, 185 federal inmates and 95 county inmates.

Herrington said that so far the jail has had the "numbers" in the form of state and federal inmates to keep the facility out of a deficit.

Also, he said, "We've been able to run a very disciplined jail."

The detention center brings in revenue by housing state and federal inmates, and cuts costs in different areas, one of which is maintaining a large vegetable garden that Herrington said saved about $30,000 in food bills.

Another area of cost savings, he said, came in the form of a medical contract instituted several years ago with Southern Health Partners. He said this contract brought a doctor, a dentist, an on-sight nurse and a medical technician to the jail, and reduced medical costs by $750,000.

"The inmates today are 80 percent sicker than they were 10 years ago," he said, due to the drugs they've been ingesting.

Meanwhile, he said, the Good News Jail Ministry is having a positive impact on both the prison population and the staff.

"They've made the jail a safer jail, a more disciplined jail," Herrington said. "Violence (within) the jail has gone down about 40 percent."

DEBATE
from 1A

nacy made a deal impossible.

Romney gave as good as he got.

"You'll get your chance in a moment. I'm still speaking," the former Massachusetts governor said at one point while Obama was mid-sentence, drawing a gasp from the audience. He said the president's policies had failed to jumpstart the economy and had cramped energy production.

The open-stage format left the two men free to stroll freely across a red-carpeted stage, and they did. Their clashes crackled with energy and tension, and the crowd watched raptly as the two sparred while struggling to appear calm and affable before a national television audience.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Republican presidential nominee Mitt Romney and President Barack Obama spar over energy policy during the second presidential debate at Hofstra University Tuesday in Hempstead, N.Y.

While most of the debate was focused on policy differences, there was one more-personal moment, when Obama said Romney had investments in China.

"Mr. President, have you looked at your pension?" Romney interrupted.

"You know, I don't look at my pension. It's not as big as yours," shot back Obama to his wealthier rival.

Under the format agreed to in advance, members of an audience of 82 uncommitted voters posed questions to the president and his challenger.

Nearly all of them concerned domestic policy until one raised the subject of the recent death of the U.S. ambassador to Libya in a terrorist attack at an American post in Benghazi. Romney said it took Obama a long time to admit the episode had been a terrorist attack, but Obama said he had said so the day after in an appearance in the Rose Garden outside the White House.

When moderator Candy Crowley of CNN said the president had in fact done so, Obama, prompted, "Say that a little louder, Candy."

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton has taken responsibility for the death of Ambassador L. Christopher Stevens and three other Americans, but Obama said bluntly, "I'm the president, and I'm always responsible."

Romney said it was "troubling" that Obama continued with a campaign event in Las Vegas on the day after the attack in Libya, an event the Republican said had "symbolic significance and perhaps even material significance."

Obama seemed to bristle. He said it was offensive for anyone to allege that he or anyone in his administration had used the incident for political purposes. "That's not what I do."

One intense exchange focused on competing claims about whether energy production is increasing or slowing. Obama accused Romney of misrepresenting what has happened — a theme he returned to time and again. Romney strode across the stage to confront Obama face to face, just feet from the audience.

Then the president's determination to show a more aggressive side became evident.

Rebutting his rival's claim to a five-point plan to create 12 million jobs, Obama said, "Gov. Romney says he's got a five-point plan. Gov. Romney doesn't have a five-point plan. He has a one-point plan. And that plan is to make sure that folks at the top play by a different set of rules."

"That's been his philosophy in the private sector," Obama said of his rival. "That's been his philosophy as governor. That's been his philosophy as a presidential candidate. You can make a lot of money and pay lower tax rates than somebody who makes a lot less."

"You can ship jobs overseas and get tax breaks for it. You can invest in a country, bankrupt it, lay off the workers, strip away their pensions and you still make money. That's exactly the philosophy that we've seen in place for the last decade," the president said in a scorching summation.

Unable to respond at length because of the debate's rules, Romney said the accusations were "way off the mark."

But moments later, he reminded the national television audience of the nation's painfully slow recovery from the worst recession in decades.

There are "23 million people struggling to find a job. ... The president's policies have been exercised over the last four years and they haven't put America back to work," he said. "We have fewer people working today than when he took office."

SKI DAY

fair to the taxpayers to ask them to cover the costs of an event that is put on by private parties — not unless the county is willing to do the same for all comers.

Magistrate Charles Alexander, who presided over the meeting in the absence of Judge-executive Hugh McCormick, said he hopes the ordinance does not mean the end of Ski Day. The primary reasoning behind the ordinance, he said, was to regulate large events at the Sandy Watkins Park near Hebbardsville.

Magistrate George Warren pointed out that ordinances from other areas was used as the basis for the local ordinance, and that it isn't aimed directly at Ski Day. "The ordinance was not created out of your event," he said, although he noted Ski Day was going on while the ordinance was being drafted.

"Ski Day was kind of secondary," said Magistrate Butch Puttman. "This ordinance wasn't designed to pick on a particular event."

LABOR

Shonis has been a Catholic priest for more than 40 years and is a friend of labor, having been raised in the coal fields of northeastern Pennsylvania in a family of miners. His mother was a member of The International Ladies Garments Workers and his father a member of the Bakery and Confectionary Workers International who both retired on union pensions.

He serves as the chaplain for the Rank and File Catholic, a newsletter that connects the teachings of the Catholic Church with the struggles of labor. Shonis also is a board member of the Kentucky Institute of Labor, a think tank on labor issues in Kentucky.

He currently is the Bishops' spokeperson for Building with Dignity, a program presented to each church before they begin a capital campaign for church construction.

Shonis is a founding member of Catholic Business Leaders for a Better World, which hosts four breakfasts a year to help Catholic business people connect their work with the social justice teaching of the Catholic Church.

Each week he visits a parishioner at the their workplace and then meets with them in small groups to connect their work and their faith.

Shonis speaks Spanish and helps organize the annual Spanish health Fair held each February.

He is also heard each Sunday morning at 8:30 a.m. or WSON on "The Common Word," a roundtable discussion with three Protestant ministers relating the Sunday Scriptures to daily life.

Additionally, the council will award former Youth Community Service Award winner Sean West with a $1,000 scholarship to Henderson Community College.

A senior at Henderson County High School, West has volunteered for the past six years with various groups, logging 12,500 hours of service to organizations ranging from Riverview School to food, coat and glasses drives.

As an eighth-grader, he was selected a Member of Excellence of the Junior Optimistic Octagon International for his work to raise money to fight cystic fibrosis, becoming the only person in the 20,000-member organization to win the honor shy of their senior year.

The guest speaker at the awards banquet will be Kentucky Secretary of State Alison Lundergan Grimes.

The keynote speaker will AFL-CIO State President Bill Londrigan.

The banquet will begin at 6 p.m. Saturday at the Henderson Elks Lodge on U.S. 60-East. Tickets are $20 and include the meal, drink and dessert.

The public is invited. For tickets, call 869-4044 or send email to pattycoomes@hotmail.com.

McCaskill waits tables, gets targeted by new ad

By David A. Lieb
Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Missouri Sen. Claire McCaskill donned a waitressing apron and dished out hamburgers and pizza Tuesday to illustrate her support for federal student aid as her Republican challenger Todd Akin picked up some important advertising help from a political group affiliated with Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul.

Paul's political action committee said it plans to begin running an ad today in Missouri targeting McCaskill for opposing his attempt to block foreign aid to Egypt, Libya and Pakistan. McCaskill said Akin's support for Paul's efforts show that Akin "is on the edge of the earth" when it comes to his political views.

McCaskill and Akin have long cast their pivotal campaign in Missouri as one of sharp contrasts, even before Akin propelled the race into the national spotlight with his August remarks about women's bodies having ways of avoiding pregnancy in cases of "legitimate rape." The low six-figure ad buy from the Rand PAC marks an important financial step for Akin, who has apologized repeatedly for his remark. But it still makes up for only a fraction of the several million dollars of advertising that Akin lost from Republican organizations and GOP-leaning interest groups after his rape remark.

McCaskill reported raising a Missouri quarterly record of $5.8 million from July through September, as national attention focused on Akin's remark and his refusal to heed calls by top national Republicans to drop out of the race. She reported about $2.1 million remaining in her campaign account at the start of October.

Akin has not publicly released his quarterly finance figures yet, though they were due to be sent Monday to the Senate. It sometimes takes several days before the financial reports, which are filed on paper, are received and released by the Senate.

Akin was campaigning Tuesday in southern Missouri with the family of Michelle and Jim Bob Duggar, an Arkansas couple whose household of 19 children is the subject of the TLC reality television show "19 Kids and Counting." McCaskill, meanwhile, relived her college days as a waitress, taking orders and serving food to about a dozen people at a restaurant in Columbia, where she once attended the University of Missouri. A campaign video crew followed her around, capturing footage for a potential advertisement. More than a dozen journalists watched and recorded the event. Many of the people McCaskill served were supporters who came to the restaurant for an early lunch because they knew she would be there.

"There was a point to this," McCaskill said. "I got through school doing this with the help of student loans."

McCaskill contrasted her support for federal student loans and the minimum wage with opposition by Akin, who doesn't believe the federal government should be setting wage rates and opposed a 2010 law that put the government — instead of banks — in the role of directly issuing student loans. Akin campaign adviser Rick Tyler said the suburban St. Louis congressman believes the federal government's involvement with student loans will eventually drive up the cost. McCaskill has said the government was able to lower costs to students by eliminating banks as a go-between.

The ad by Paul's political action committee shows images of people tearing down a U.S. flag in Egypt and attacking the U.S. embassy in Libya and notes that Pakistan imprisoned a man who helped U.S. troops track down Osama bin Laden. It chastises McCaskill for voting to allow the countries to receive foreign aid. Similar ads are running against Democrats in Florida, Ohio and West Virginia, said Doug Stafford, a spokesman for the Rand PAC.

Paul has no campaign events planned with Akin but decided to begin running ads in Missouri because "that race looks like it might be a close race, and he'd like to see this issue have an impact," Stafford said.

McCaskill, who is member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said everyone on the committee opposed Paul's amendment to cut off foreign aid and noted that just 10 senators supported it last month. She described Paul's failed amendment as "knee-jerk political gamesmanship" that could have escalated tensions in an already dangerous part of the world.

"This shows that Todd Akin is going to remain on the fringe if he were to become a United States senator," McCaskill said. "Most thoughtful Republicans voted against the Rand Paul amendment because they knew it was going to put our country in danger."

Akin has said he doesn't believe countries should receive U.S. aid until they take steps to prove they are good allies.

Cheerleader falls from fifth-floor window

Louisville woman still listed in 'critical' condition

Associated Press

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — A Penn State cheerleader who fell five stories from a window at an off-campus apartment building opened her eyes Tuesday but remains in critical condition, a family spokesman said.

Randy Jepson, the Penn State men's gymnastics coach, said Tuesday that Paige Raque showed "some positive signs" after making some small movements and opening her eyes.

"It's a good sign, but it's going to be a slow process," Jepson said in a phone interview. Raque, 19, of Louisville, was in the intensive care unit, he said.

Raque's brother, Parker, is the men's gymnastics team captain. "Much more positivity with our family after seeing a little progress today," he wrote Tuesday on his Twitter account.

Police said Tuesday an investigation was continuing, though the fall appears to have been accidental.

Authorities have said the cheerleader fell 39 feet through a screened window during a party Saturday night on the fifth floor of the downtown apartment building.

A university directory listed Raque's address on the same floor.

She was flown to Altoona Regional Health System with head and pelvic injuries.

Raque and her family were flooded with messages of support on social media. Penn State football coach Bill O'Brien extended his well-wishes when asked about the fall at his weekly press conference Tuesday.

"My heart goes out to Paige and her family, and I feel terrible about that," O'Brien said. "I know her brother is a great gymnast here, and it's a terrible thing."

Jepson said the family appreciated the kind thoughts from across the Penn State campus. "The biggest thing the family is requesting is prayer and support," he said.

Lady Cols win, set up showdown

Henderson County to take on Caldwell in volleyball semifinals

PRINCETON, Ky. – Henderson County eased past Crittenden County into a semifinal showdown with three-time defending champion Caldwell County in the Second Region Volleyball Tournament.

The Lady Colonels (32-5) were never challenged in Tuesday's 25-6, 25-4, 25-11 victory.

"We wanted to play sharp and set the tone for the way we wanted to play in the regional tournament this week," Henderson County coach Mary Howard said. "We're one step closer to our goal, which is the same as every team here, and that's to win the regional championship."

Host Caldwell County (27-9) joined Henderson County in the semifinals with a 25-13, 21-25, 25-18, 25-16 victory over University Heights in Tuesday's other first-round contest.

Arguably the region's top two teams, Henderson County and Caldwell County split two regular-season matches. The Lady Tigers won in an early-season tournament in Hopkinsville and the Lady Colonels claimed the regular-season rematch three weeks ago in Henderson. "We completely expect this to be a great game, one to remember in the rivalry between Henderson and Caldwell," Howard said.

Alisha McBride

Meredith Proctor

Crittenden County (6-17) could do little to keep the Lady Colonels out of the semifinals.

Henderson County won the opening game 25-6. Meredith Proctor served six straight points as the Lady Colonels expanded their lead from 12-5 to 18-5, then Taylor Polivick served the last seven points of the game. Polivick had four of her team-high 10 aces in that seven-point stretch.

The Lady Colonels scored the last 16 points of the second game with Jessica Cannon serving.

Continuing the dominating stretch, Henderson County scored the first 10 points of the third game with Polivick serving.

Alisha McBride led the Lady Colonels with nine kills. Katelyn McMillan had seven kills and two aces. Shelby O'Nan had six kills and Proctor five. Cannon totaled 29 assists.

"Our main concern was maintaining our focus," Howard said. "We did that, and we didn't have any lapses. We were sharp from start to finish."

Henderson County and Caldwell County will play in the semifinals Thursday at 7:30 p.m. Christian County (20-17) and Hopkins Central (19-15) will meet in Thursday's other semifinal at 6 p.m. The championship match is set for Saturday at 7 p.m.

The St. Louis Cardinals' Allen Craig, left, appears to tag the San Francisco Giants' Gregor Blanco as Blanco heads back to first base on a fly ball during the eighth inning of Game 2 of baseball's National League championship series on Monday in San Francisco. The umpires called him safe, and the Giants won 7-1 to tie the series at 1-1. Game 3 is today in St. Louis.

Bochy rejects talk of retaliation

By R.B. Fallstrom
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS – Giants manager Bruce Bochy expects Marco Scutaro to be in his lineup card for Game 3 of the NL championship series, two days after St. Louis slugger Matt Holliday plowed into the San Francisco second baseman.

"I think so. It feels much better," Scutaro said Tuesday night after participating in a workout at Busch Stadium. "I thought it was going to be worse. Normally, the next day is when you feel it the most."

Neither seemed too interested in any talk of retaliation.

"What's on our mind is to go out and play our best ball," Bochy said Tuesday night, a day before the best-of-seven series resumes at Busch Stadium with the Giants and St. Louis Cardinals tied at one game apiece. "That's over. You have to move on."

Scutaro said a shutout from Matt Cain would be perfect and knew nothing about get-even plans. If Matt Holliday approached him before the game, he joked that the Cardinals slugger would be in for a fight.

The recollection of the play was vivid.

"All of a sudden, I just saw this train coming," he said. "I didn't have time to do pretty much anything. I don't even know how I threw the ball to first, but I think I did, huh?"

He added that if Holliday had slid any farther, "probably you're going to make it to shortstop."

Results of an MRI exam showed Scutaro has a strained left hip after Holliday's late slide while busting up a double play. Bochy said Scutaro also had a sore left knee, and the manager had planned on holding him out of practice after the team flight arrived from the West Coast.

"We're being hopeful he can go," Bochy said. "I will say he's more optimistic about where he's at right now than when it first happened."

Cain, who will face fellow 16-game winner Kyle Lohse, said little about any possible animosity. Cain added that he wouldn't be afraid to throw inside against Holliday.

"You've got to go out there and pitch your game," Cain said. "If something gets away from me inside, that's kind of part of the game. You can't have a fear of doing that."

The 36-year-old Scutaro was an unexpected find for the Giants, batting .362 with 40 runs and 44 RBIs in 61 games after being acquired in late July from the Rockies for a minor league infielder. He's batting .250 with three RBIs in the playoffs, but has stepped it up in the NLCS, going 4 for 8 with two RBIs.

"He's driven in a lot of two-out runs and gotten rallies going for us as well," Cain said. "He's been really, really big for us."

Bochy reiterated his opinion that Holliday had made an "illegal slide," but said he hadn't talked with St. Louis manager Mike Matheny or anyone else on the Cardinals.

"I don't think there was intent, to be honest, hurting somebody," Bochy said.

Season ends for Braves with loss

By Mitchell Stinson
Gleaner correspondent

Union County's soccer season came to a close in a Trigg County barrage Tuesday, with the Wildcats outshooting the Braves, 24-0, en route to a 6-0 win at the Second Region Tournament. The only things preventing a mercy rule ending were four shots off the post or crossbar, scrambling defense and a spectacular performance by goalkeeper Zane Bradford.

Union County's rookie senior put on a great show in net, diving left and right for one highlight-reel stop after another. He finished with 18 saves and also sprinted forward for several collections in traffic. Not bad for a guy who'd never played high school soccer before this year and became goalkeeper about halfway through the season.

"He's just a good athlete," Braves coach Robbie Greenwell said. "He was a baseball player and had been having arm problems, so he came out (for soccer)."

It stokes the imagination to think of the heights Bradford could've reached as a four-year veteran. He kept his team in the game early, holding Trigg to two goals in the first 30 minutes. The second score came off a Ben Wigand close-range shot that deflected off a defender and bounced across the line.

The Wildcats took a 3-0 edge into halftime, courtesy of a Blaine Alexander blast from close range. Trigg has a lot of powerful legs, so blistering shot attempts were the norm. Bradford stood tall in the line of fire and never flinched but some were bound to get through.

Wigand put three into the net, while Alexander added two more. Rounding out the attack was Colten Bridges, who scored the game's first goal. Swarmed by the Wildcats' smooth attack, Braves defenders never lost heart and battled throughout.

"I was happy with our defense, even though they gave up six goals," coach Greenwell said. He was happy with the year in general, which ended with the Braves at 2-13-1. "I was very happy with the season. I think we've got a lot to build on."

Trigg County moves on to today's semifinal round where it will meet the Madisonville Maroons, who edged University Heights, 2-1.

Lady Cols win to advance in girls soccer regional EDDYVILLE, Ky. – Henderson County shook off a lackluster start to survive its opening round match in the Girls Second Region Soccer Tournament and beat Caldwell County 4-2.

The win sends the Lady Colonels into tonight's semifinal match against Hopkinsville, which defeated Trigg County 10-0 in a contest that ended at halftime by the mercy rule.

The Lady Colonels (10-7-4) had beaten Caldwell County 8-1 early in the season but were in for a challenge in the postseason rematch.

"We came in a little overconfident and a little flat," Henderson County coach Doc DeWitt said.

Caldwell County (10-11-1) struck first on an early goal by Macie Giannini.

"Caldwell got some momentum from the first goal. They acted like they wanted it more. They started winning the 50-50 balls," DeWitt said.

Emma Newland tied the contest on a direct kick as she scored the first of four straight goals for the Lady Colonels.

"We were fortunate to get a foul, and Emma took a quick direct kick that surprised Caldwell and caught them off guard," DeWitt said.

In the closing minutes of the first half, Christin Poole scored from the right-side of the goal to put the Lady Colonels ahead for good.

Henderson County put together sharper passes in the second half but didn't score again until more than half of the final 40:00 had passed.

"We had a 20-minute stretch where our passing was better, but we weren't finishing well, which has been an Achilles' heel for us," DeWitt said.

Julia Mathews scored as she got past the Caldwell County keeper and scored on a pass from Kendal Breedlove with 18:00 to go to increase the lead to 3-1.

With 12:30 to go, Hannah Buley scored on an assist from Newland to build the lead to 4-1.

The Lady Tigers struck last as Hannah Bowles scored off a corner kick. "We stood and watched the ball. I hated to see them score on a goal they shouldn't have had," DeWitt said.

"We gave them all we had," Caldwell County coach Josh Ray said.

Tonight's 7:30 p.m. match will be the second meeting of the season with 18-3 Hopkinsville, which beat the Lady Colonels 9-0 on Aug. 14.

"They won 10-0 tonight and made it look like a college team playing a high school team. They're that good," DeWitt said. "It's going to be a good challenge for us."

Host Lyon County (9-12) and Madisonville (19-1-1) will meet in the 5:30 p.m. opener with the championship match scheduled for Thursday at 7 p.m.

The winner advances to face the First Region champion on Monday in the first round of the state tournament.

Magical Manning hits his stride

■ He engineers the biggest comeback of his great career

By Arnie Stapleton
Associated Press

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. – Turns out reports of Peyton Manning's demise were ridiculously premature.

Denver's quarterback has been outstanding by every measure since throwing three interceptions in the first quarter at Atlanta a month ago. His trio of wobblers that night left critics questioning his stability, strength and stamina after spending all of last season on the sideline.

His latest Monday night performance went much better as he engineered the biggest comeback of his career in the Broncos' 35-24 win at San Diego and tied Dan Marino for first place with his 47th game-winning drive in the fourth quarter or overtime.

"These comeback victories are great," Manning said, "but all it means is that you screwed up in the first half."

For once, they were able to overcome their first-half foibles as Manning vaulted the Broncos (3-3) into a first-place tie with the Chargers atop the AFC West after a treacherous early-season schedule that lightens up considerably after their bye this week.

Even with four neck operations to match his four MVP trophies, the quarterback is on pace at age 36 to throw for more yards than he ever did in Indianapolis. If he keeps this up, he'll also post the second-best marks of his career in attempts, completions, completion percentage, touchdowns and QB rating along with his second-fewest interceptions in a season.

At this rate, he would also set franchise records for yards passing, completions, completion percentage and TD passes.

He's also the first quarterback in NFL history to throw for 300 yards and three TDs while completing at least 70 percent of his passes in three straight games.

Any more questions about his health or his hardiness?

"Everyone talked about him a couple weeks ago, but he's been the least of my worries," coach John Fox said. "I think he's just going to get better and better."

Consider this: Since matching the worst quarter, interception-wise, of his career against the Falcons in Week 2, Manning has thrown for 1,519 yards with 11 touchdowns and just one interception in 195 passes — and that pickoff wasn't even his fault. Matthew Willis didn't recognize the overload on his side and failed to adjust his route accordingly Monday night, allowing Quentin Jammer to step up for an easy pick-six.

So, how much better can Manning possibly get?

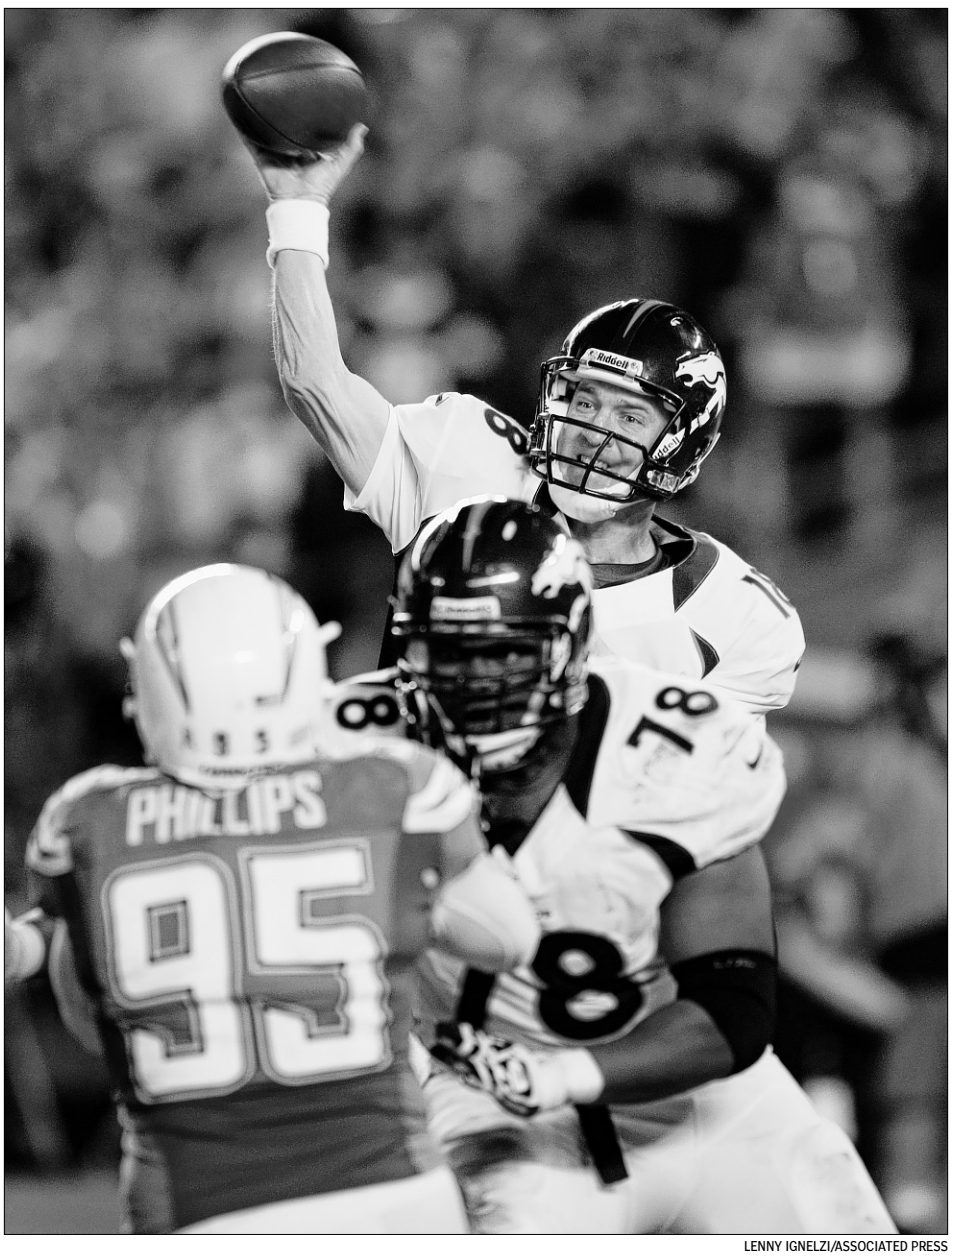
"I think maybe the word is not so much `better,' but `more comfortable,'" Fox said Tuesday. "Everybody's adjusting, and they're doing a good job, and they're working hard to get there in a hurry. ... There's always something you can improve on. You never think you've arrived, so we still have a lot of work to do."

Like figuring out how to quit digging themselves into such big holes.

The Broncos have found themselves trailing by 20 points to the Falcons and Texans, and by 24 to the Patriots and Chargers.

"Well, if it was just one habit, it would be easy to break," Fox said. "But we've kind of spread those habits around. And I'm not being flippant about it, we've got to get that cleaned up."

On Monday night, "we found a new way to self-destruct," Fox said, pointing to two special teams fumbles.



LENNY IGNELZI/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Denver Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning throws a pass against the San Diego Chargers during the second half of Monday night's game in San Diego. Manning led the Broncos back from a 24-0 halftime deficit to a 35-24 victory over the Chargers.

They also found new ways to come back, with three TD tosses from Manning and two defensive touchdowns as they erased the Chargers' 24-0 halftime lead. That tied their biggest comeback in franchise history and left the AFC with just two winning teams — Baltimore and Houston — and both of them have their share of issues and injuries.

The Broncos' losses have come to teams with a combined 14-4 record, but the remainder of their schedule has a composite 18-32 record and features just one winning team — the Ravens, who lost anchor Ray Lewis to a torn triceps Sunday.

For all their slow starts, the Broncos have outscored their opponents 79-6 in the fourth quarter, an indication they believe they're never out of it with Manning on their side. For once, though, they have an actual comeback to celebrate and not just a moral victory to ponder.

They're hoping it can catapult them to better days in the weeks and months ahead.

"It's hard to have a lot of confidence and belief when nothing good happens," Fox said. "It takes something like last night, something good happening, to kind of build on."

The Broncos became the first team in nearly a quarter-century to win after falling behind 24-0. Denver's defense forced Philip Rivers into a career-high six turnovers, including ones that Tony Carter and Chris Harris returned for touchdowns.

Baseball's playoffs full of swings in momentum

By Josh Dubow
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO – Just ask the Oakland Athletics and Washington Nationals how much momentum means in the postseason.

Poised to ride the wave from Game 4 walkoff wins in the division series, the A's and Nationals were promptly thrown under water — Oakland by a brilliant start by Justin Verlander, Washington by a bullpen meltdown.

It happens every October, or at least seems to. Just when one team appears to have seized momentum with a dramatic comeback or frantic finish that leaves the other side devastated, the roles get reversed.

"For me, I don't really believe in that kind of stuff," St. Louis infielder David Freese said. "We're all professionals here and you wake up the next day no matter what happened previously and you grind it out. ... As far as momentum, I think both teams just battle and you just play it out. And then if it doesn't work out one night you get a good night's sleep and you show up the next day ready to go."

If there's anyone who would be a believer, it could be Freese. He helped the Cardinals deny Texas a World Series title a year ago that seemed firmly in the Rangers' grasp.

With the Cardinals down to their final strike in Game 6, Freese hit a two-run triple with two outs in the bottom of the ninth against Neftali Feliz to tie the game. Josh Hamilton replied with a two-run homer in the 10th only to have St. Louis tie it in the bottom half. Freese then forced Game 7 when he led off the 11th with a homer against Mark Lowe.

The Cardinals then won it all the next night in Game 7, overcoming an early two-run deficit to win 6-2.

There are plenty of other examples l— from the New York Mets' improbable Game 6 rally that led to a World Series title in 1986 to Kirby Puckett's walkoff homer in Game 6 in the 1991 World Series that was followed by Jack Morris' 10-inning shutout that game the Minnesota Twins the title over Atlanta.

That was perhaps the best example of former Baltimore manager Earl Weaver's mantra that "momentum is the next day's starter." That proved true again this year when Verlander beat Oakland 6-0 in Game 5 a night after the Tigers blew a 3-1 lead in the ninth inning.

"I don't want to sound casual about this kind of stuff, because don't get me wrong, the game broke our heart," Tigers manager Jim Leyland said before the Game 5 win. "But at the same time you learn over the years that, like I always use the expression, you can't chew yesterday's breakfast."

N. Kentucky officials support Turfway

■ Churchill Downs eyeing track's traditional dates

By Bruce Schreiner
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE – Worried their struggling neighborhood track could lose key racing dates, some northern Kentucky leaders are mounting a late-stretch campaign in support of Turfway Park ahead of a decision on next year's racing assignments.

The business and political leaders are targeting the Kentucky Horse Racing Commission, which is weighing competing requests from Turfway and Churchill Downs to host racing next September.

The commission's Race Dates Committee is scheduled to meet Wednesday, and the full commission is set to meet Oct. 23. The commission has a Nov. 1 deadline to assign 2013 dates for the state's race tracks.

Turfway has been the state's traditional home of September racing, but Churchill is seeking permission for racing during four three-day weekends in September. The famed Louisville track, home of the Kentucky Derby, says it could offer at least $200,000 in daily purses in September, twice the amount of daily winnings Turfway awarded to horsemen during its 16-day racing schedule last month.

Churchill also says it would look at including popular night racing and stakes races, possibly tune-ups for the Breeders' Cup. The September racing would be tacked on to the track's traditional spring and fall meets.

"Certainly Churchill is a big player and they have a big voice in the state. It's probably a little like David and Goliath when we're talking about competing for those dates," said Steve Stevens, president and CEO of the Northern Kentucky Chamber of Commerce.

That's not deterring the northern Kentucky leaders, who The Kentucky Enquirer first reported were making calls and writing letters in support of Turfway.

The Florence track also has a holiday meet in December and a winter-spring meet from January through March. Those meets enable Kentucky to offer racing year round. But September racing is seen as a crucial revenue generator to help get Turfway through winter.

"There's a fall tradition of going out to Turfway," said Boone County Judge-Executive Gary Moore. "We need to protect that. We need to fight for that. We want to do everything we can to preserve the thoroughbred industry here in northern Kentucky."

Turfway has struggled to keep up with competitors outside Kentucky that sweeten their purses with money from casino-style gambling. Kentucky's tracks have pushed for a proposal to allow them to add slot machines, but their efforts have failed in the state General Assembly.

In another setback, Turfway scratched its Kentucky Cup Day of Champions, its premier fall racing event.

Some of the track's supporters said Turfway's ownership, which includes the casino groups Caesars Entertainment and Rock Gaming, could strengthen its position by outlining plans to enhance the beleaguered track.

"That would go a long way," Stevens said.

He said that Turfway would benefit from adding Instant Racing, which allows gamblers to wager on previously run but unidentified horse races. The casino-style game is a big hit at Kentucky Downs, generating new revenue for the track at Franklin near the Tennessee line.

Ellis Park, another Kentucky track that has struggled to compete, also has added Instant Racing machines. Turfway, though, has stayed on the sidelines while the legality of Instant Racing is being challenged in court by the Family Foundation of Kentucky.

Auburn takes tumble from title team

By John Zenor
Associated Press

AUBURN, Ala. – Two years ago, Cam Newton and the Auburn Tigers were unstoppable.

Newton and fellow star Nick Fairley have long since headed to the NFL after spearheading the 2010 national title run — and the Tigers' fall has been as dramatic as that sudden rise.

Now, after one of the program's worst starts in six decades, even a bowl game seems out of reach and Gene Chizik's job security has become a hot topic around the state.

Even former Auburn coach Pat Dye, who has been a big Chizik supporter, said on a syndicated radio show that he doesn't think the Tigers will win a Southeastern Conference game. Dye said the offensive problems, starting at quarterback, are unsolvable.

The Tigers play at favored Vanderbilt on Saturday.

Chizik said he wasn't aware of those comments and insists he's tuning out the criticism and urging his players to do the same, just like he wanted them to ignore the praise during that title run.

"My day when I walk through the door consists of my coaches and my players and the direction that we're headed," Chizik said Monday. "What makes college football great is that, you know what, there's going to be people on the radio, there's going to be people on the TV, there's going to be people outside now that can say and do whatever they want and it can be public as it can be. And hey that's great. That's great.

"But if I concerned myself with all of that, then that would suck the energy and the life out of me trying to do a job that I know I've got to stay concentrating on one thing, trying to keep my coaches and my players on the path of improvement."

The Tigers (1-5, 0-4 SEC) are off to their worst start since 1998 when coach Terry Bowden leapt off a sinking ship in midseason after starting with the same record. They haven't opened 1-6 since Ralph "Shug" Jordan's second team won only twice in 1952.

No team has fallen so far so fast from a national title since the BCS era began in 1998. The most comparable — and they're really not unless Auburn manages a huge turnaround — were both from SEC teams: Tennessee followed up the 1998 title with 9-3 and 8-4 seasons; LSU endured 8-5 and 9-4 seasons before returning to form after the 2007 championship.

Both remained respectable, though.

It doesn't appear there's a quick fix at Auburn, especially on offense.

A quarterback change from Kiehl Frazier to Clint Moseley didn't really jumpstart the Tigers, who rank 116th nationally in total offense and only one spot better in scoring.

Buckeyes' Miller chasing Heisman

It could serve as a championship trophy for banned Ohio State team

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press

For Braxton Miller and No. 7 Ohio State, the Heisman could be their championship trophy.

The Buckeyes' quarterback has grown up fast in Urban Meyer's spread offense. A sophomore in his second season as a starter, Miller is averaging 311 yards total offense per game (16th best in the nation), including 130 a game on the ground (seventh in the nation).

He has accounted for 20 touchdowns, and carried the Buckeyes and their shoddy defense to a 7-0 record. They might be the best team in unimpressive Big Ten, but because Ohio State did not self-impose a bowl ban last year — before the NCAA handed down punishments for the memorabilia-for-tattoos scandal — the Buckeyes' 2012 season will end with the Michigan game on Nov. 24.

While conference and national championships are off the table, the Heisman is very much in play.

"I would have no problem putting Braxton Miller on my Heisman ballot," said Mark Snyder from the Detroit Free Press. "He still plays the games, still has to perform at the level worthy of the award and he had nothing to do with the reason the Buckeyes are sanctioned."

Seth Emerson of the Macon Telegraph and Columbus Ledger-Enquirer said: "He's blameless, so I won't blame him."

There is also precedent for a player on a bowl-banned team winning the Heisman. Houston quarterback Andre Ware did it in 1989, when he threw for 4,699 yards, 44 touchdowns while directing the Cougars and their run-and-shoot offense to a 9-2 season in the Southwest Conference.

Chris Huston, a Heisman historian who runs www.Heismanpundit.com and does a weekly straw poll of 11 voters, said the sanctions might even work to Miller's advantage with voters.

"They might credit him for keeping the program afloat in tough times," Huston said.

Miller is a close third behind West Virginia's Geno Smith and Kansas State's Collin Klein in the straw poll released Tuesday.

The biggest problem the postseason ban poses for Miller is it keeps him and the Buckeyes out of the Big Ten title game on the final Saturday before Heisman ballots are due.

In recent years, the final weekend of games has become a time for closing arguments in the Heisman race. The last four Heisman winners all played, and played well, during what has become known as championship weekend.

Miller won't play at all, which could provide an opportunity for another contender to make a decisive final impression.

Maybe the most fascinating part of Miller's Heisman candidacy, though, is the way it will be treated by Ohio State.

Meyer has tried to subtly to downplay Miller's Heisman-worthiness, while still talking up his guy.

"I think he's one of those freaks of nature that has a lot of ability and great things can happen to him," Meyer said back in September. "But there won't be billboards posted anywhere or anything like that."

Last week, the message changed a bit.

"I don't think Braxton's a Heisman candidate right now," Meyer said. "I think he's certainly to watch. He's got the ability. But then again, I don't know who is. We're only halfway through the season. In about two or three games I think you can start talking about that. I'm not talking to Braxton about it. We're trying to win some games, so ...

"I think at the right time, he will be a candidate if he continues to play very well."

Coaches with championships to play for don't delve that deeply into Heisman questions in October.

SAM RICHE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ohio State quarterback Braxton Miller (5) runs past Indiana cornerback Greg Heban (9) to score on a 67-yard run during the second half of their game in Bloomington, Ind., on Saturday. Ohio State won 52-49.

But Meyer understands that if Miller can make a serious run at the big bronze statue, and get an invite to New York city for the awards ceremony on Dec. 8, it keeps the Buckeyes in the headlines even though they won't be preparing for a bowl game.

And what's better to add to a trophy case, anyway, a Heisman Trophy or whatever they give you for winning an Outback Bowl?

CHAMPIONS BOWL

SEC and Big 12 officials are expected to decide by the end of October where their new marquee bowl game will be played.

The choice has come down to the Sugar Bowl in New Orleans or the Cotton Bowl, now played at Dallas Cowboys Stadium in Arlington, Texas.

The SEC has had a long and prosperous relationship with the Sugar Bowl and the city of New Orleans. Atlanta is the conference's eastern hub and the site of its championship game. New Orleans is its western home base, and the place it goes to party after the season.

The Big 12 has been sending teams to the Cotton Bowl for a long time, but the city of Dallas has not always been embraced by all the conference's members. Most of the northern members of the Big 12 voted against moving the league offices to the Dallas area out of Kansas City, Mo., after the Big Eight became the Big 12 in 1996. Of course, two of those members — Missouri and Nebraska — are now gone.

If the choice simply came down to venue, Jerry Jones' billion dollar stadium would win in a landslide over the perfectly functional — but not nearly as audacious — Superdome.

Cowboys Stadium holds close to 90,000. The Superdome can hold about 76,000. More tickets equals more revenue.

But fans love going to New Orleans. No city does big sporting events better.

Ultimately, there will be no loser. Whichever group doesn't land the Champions Bowl will still end up in the semifinal rotation for the new playoff system starting in 2014.

HEISMAN WATCH

They call him Johnny Football, and in the next few weeks we'll find out if Texas A&M redshirt freshman Johnny Manziel can also be called a serious Heisman contender.

A dual-threat quarterback running coach Kevin Sumlin's spread, Manziel is second in the nation in total offense (392 ypg) for the 20th-ranked Aggies.

On Saturday, No. 6 LSU comes to College Station. After that, the Aggies play three road games in three weeks against Auburn, No. 15 Mississippi State and No. 1 Alabama.

QUICK HITS

■ Arizona State coach Todd Graham received plenty of criticism for leaving Pittsburgh after just one season. It's time to give Graham some praise for leading a team with only eight returning starters to a 5-1 start. There is much heavy lifting to come, though. ASU's schedule is backloaded, starting Thursday night when No. 2 Oregon comes to Tempe.

■ For all of Wisconsin's issues, you can just about guarantee the Badgers are heading toward their second consecutive Big Ten title game, with a chance to go to a third straight Rose Bowl. With Ohio State and Penn State ineligible for the Legends Division title, and Purdue, Indiana and Illinois a combined 0-8 in the league, Montee Ball and the Badgers (5-2, 2-1) should be able to get to Indianapolis with two more league victories. They play Minnesota this week and are at Indiana on Nov. 10. That should do it.

■ The only winless teams left in FCS are Mid-American Conference rivals Massachusetts (0-6) and Eastern Michigan (0-6), and, stunningly, Southern Mississippi (0-6). The Conference USA champions and were expected to contend again under new coach Ellis Johnson, but instead will need to win out to avoid the program's first losing season since 1993.

Murray looks to get Georgia offense moving again vs. UK

By Charles Odum
Associated Press

ATHENS, Ga. – Aaron Murray's Georgia-red shirt relayed a message of reassurance:

"Keep Calm. We've got Gurshall."

Gurshall is the nickname for No. 13 Georgia's freshmen tailback duo, Todd Gurley and Keith Marshall. Each ranks among the Southeastern Conference's rushing leaders.

Murray says his mother made the shirt he wore to Tuesday's news conference. Asked why the shirt didn't bear his name, he smiled and said "I wouldn't want to wear that shirt, that's why."

The junior quarterback and the freshmen couldn't lift Georgia's offense in a 35-7 loss at South Carolina on Oct. 6. The loss ended the Bulldogs' school-record streak of five straight games with more than 40 points, and Murray's 109 yards passing set a career low.

Murray and Georgia (5-1, 3-1 Southeastern Conference) will look to regain their offensive momentum at Kentucky on Saturday.

The loss was the start to a bad week for Murray. The house he shares with teammates was egged and littered with toilet paper. His father, Denny Murray, had surgery on Monday in Tampa for thyroid cancer.

Murray said his father is "doing well" and is back at work.

Following a long off week, the Bulldogs finally have a chance to move past the ugly loss to the Gamecocks.

One of Murray's roommates, linebacker Christian Robinson, said he expects the quarterback to have a strong answer to his poor results at South Carolina. Murray completed only 11 of 31 passes with an interception and no touchdowns, ending a streak of at least one touchdown pass in 13 straight games.

BRETT FLASHNICK/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Georgia quarterback Aaron Murray hands the ball off to running back Todd Gurley during a game against South Carolina in Columbia, S.C., on Saturday, Oct. 6. South Carolina beat Georgia 35-7. Georgia will play at Kentucky on Saturday.

"I can see him coming back really fast and strong and making a statement," Robinson said. "That's his nature and his competitiveness. He really wants to be the best and he's going to push himself to be the best."

Murray needs only one touchdown pass to match Georgia's career record of 72 set by David Greene from 2001-04. Greene was a four-year starter, and Murray is only midway through his third season.

There has been little talk of personal milestones this week. Murray said he is focused on getting the offense moving again as the Bulldogs try to protect their hopes of catching Florida and South Carolina in the SEC East.

"It's great to have a bye week to get the body feeling better," Murray said. "But part of me wishes we had a game this past week just to get the bad taste out of our mouth and get back on the playing field and be able to compete again and not having to think about it two straight weeks."

Coach Mark Richt said Murray needed the open week to spend time with his family following his father's surgery.

"Sometimes you just have to take off and forget about football, and that was one of those times," Richt said.

Murray said the offense needs to start strong against Kentucky (1-6, 0-4 SEC).

"I think score early, just to give us some confidence and get some momentum, especially the way we played against South Carolina, not being able to put points on the board," he said. "The feel of putting that behind us, get some momentum, try to get their crowd out of the game, I think that would be huge for us offensively."

Tigers top Yanks to take 3-0 lead

DETROIT — Justin Verlander took a shutout into the ninth inning and the Detroit Tigers held on to beat the New York Yankees 2-1 Tuesday night for a 3-0 lead in the AL championship series.

Phil Coke gave up consecutive singles with two outs in the ninth before striking out postseason star Raul Ibanez for his second save in two games.

Verlander allowed only a pair of singles by Ichiro Suzuki and a leadoff homer by Eduardo Nunez in the ninth. Delmon Young hit a solo home run for the Tigers, and Miguel Cabrera had an RBI double.

Yankees starter Phil Hughes was lifted in the fourth because of a stiff back, and manager Joe Girardi's lineup shuffle — Alex Rodriguez was benched again — failed to snap New York out of its untimely hitting funk.

U.S. rallies past Guatemala, 3-1

KANSAS CITY, Kansas — Clint Dempsey scored twice as the United States rallied to beat Guatemala 3-1 Tuesday night and reach the last round of continental World Cup qualifying.

The Americans needed only a draw to advance to the six-team finals in North and Central America and the Caribbean qualifier. After Carlos Ruiz put Guatemala ahead in the fifth minute, Dempsey set up Carlos Bocanegra's goal in the 10th, then scored in the 18th and 36th minutes. With 30 international goals, Dempsey equaled Brian McBride for third-most in U.S. history.

The U.S., seeking its seventh straight World Cup appearance, topped its semifinal group with 13 points.

Guatemala was eliminated from qualifying when Dane Richards scored two goals late in the second half in Jamaica's 4-1 win over Antigua and Barbuda.

Falcons soar in NFL rankings

NEW YORK — A close call on the field, a clear win in the AP Pro32 NFL power rankings.

The Atlanta Falcons soared to the top of the rankings Tuesday after a 23-20 win over the Oakland Raiders left them as the league's only unbeaten team.

Atlanta (6-0) received 11 of the 12 first-place votes and 381 points from The Associated Press panel of media members who regularly cover the NFL.

The Giants moved up five spots to second with one first-place vote and 364 points after a 26-3 win over San Francisco. The Baltimore Ravens were third with 352 points.

The Houston Texans, who held the top spot for three weeks before their first loss, 42-24 to Green Bay, were fourth, followed by the 49ers.

Beyonce set for Super Bowl

NEW YORK — All the single ladies will be watching the upcoming Super Bowl along with football lovers. That's because Beyonce is the halftime show performer.

A source familiar with Super Bowl 47 tells The Associated Press that the Grammy-winning diva will take the stage at the halftime show on Feb. 3, 2013, at the Superdome in New Orleans. The source spoke on condition of anonymity because that person wasn't authorized to publicly reveal the information.

The source said the official announcement is expected Wednesday.

Beyonce sang the national anthem at the 2004 Super Bowl in Houston. Madonna performed at this year's Super Bowl with guests CeeLo Green, Nicki Minaj, LMFAO and M.I.A.

Citigroup CEO Pandit abruptly leaves post

The Associated Press

Vikram Pandit abruptly stepped down as CEO of Citigroup on Tuesday, shocking Wall Street, after steering the bank through the 2008 financial crisis and the choppy years that followed.

Pandit's replacement, effective immediately, is Michael Corbat, who had been CEO of Citigroup's Europe, Middle East and Africa division, the bank said. Corbat has worked at Citi and its predecessors since he graduated from Harvard in 1983, it said.

Pandit will also relinquish his seat on Citi's board of directors. A second top executive also resigned as part of the shake-up: President and Chief Operating Officer John Havens, who also served as CEO of Citi's Institutional Client Group.

Vikram Pandit

The move followed a clash with the company's board over strategy and performance at businesses, including its institutional clients group, The Wall Street Journal reported.

Shareholders also have objected to Pandit's massive pay packages. He received $15 million in 2011.

The news came as a surprise, and Citigroup offered no explanation. There was no hint of the departure Monday, when the bank announced strong third-quarter earnings.

In an analyst call that lasted an hour and 40 minutes, and a shorter call with reporters, no one asked bank executives how long Pandit planned to stay, or whether there was a succession plan in place.

The strong quarter sent Citigroup's stock price to its highest level since early April.

Pandit's departure from the board is a clear indication that "this was a complete and unexpected break" between Pandit and Citi directors, said Chris Whalen, a bank analyst and senior managing director of Tangent Capital Partners in New York.

"This shows how dysfunctional this organization is, to have this event unfold this way," Whalen said. "They should have told us yesterday, unless they didn't know."

Still, Whalen said he does not expect the changes to mark a shift in strategic direction for the bank.

"They needed new leadership to put a face on it," he said.

Pandit is credited with slimming the bank by selling businesses, removing it from government ownership after a bailout in 2008 and righting its balance sheet after billions in losses on bad mortgage investments made before he took the helm.

Today, Citi is the country's third-largest bank, with $1.9 trillion in assets, according to the Federal Reserve. It trails only JPMorgan Chase, with $2.3 trillion, and Bank of America, with $2.1 trillion.

Pandit's massive pay packages have raised the ire of investors. And some in government believed the bank was too slow to address its problems as they emerged in the months before the crisis caught fire in September 2008.

Earnings reports give stock markets big boost

The Associated Press

Inflation is low, earnings are high, investors are happy.

Stocks shot higher Tuesday, giving the market its biggest gain in a month. Results at Mattel, Goldman Sachs, and Johnson & Johnson were all above expectations.

It was the second day of broad gains following a down week last week. Investors had been worried headed into the third-quarter earnings season that corporate profits wouldn't be good enough to justify the run-up in stocks in recent months. While earnings haven't been out-of-the-park great, they haven't been as bad as some had feared.

Also Tuesday, the Labor Department said consumer prices rose just 0.1 percent last month, not counting food and energy costs. And gasoline prices have come down since then. Low inflation leaves consumers with more money to spend, and leaves the Federal Reserve free to continue its efforts to boost the economy.

In addition, an index of homebuilder sentiment came in at its highest level since 2006, suggesting that the construction industry is making a comeback.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 127.55 points to close at 13,551.78, its biggest gain since Sept. 13.

The Standard & Poor's 500 index rose 14.79 points to 1,454.92, and the Nasdaq composite rose 36.99 to 3,101.17.

The gains were broad, with nine out of 10 industry groups in the S&P 500 index rising. Telecom stocks had a tiny decline. Materials stocks rose 2.4 percent. Mattel jumped 5 percent after reporting that brisk sales of American Girl dolls and Fisher-Price toys sent the company's profit well above analysts' forecasts. The stock gained $1.78 to $37.20.

Johnson & Johnson rose 95 cents to $69.55 after revenues came in ahead of Wall Street's forecasts.

Among companies reporting after the closing bell, IBM fell in after-hours trading after its revenues came up short of Wall Street's forecasts. Intel fell after its earnings and revenue came in below forecasts.

Other stocks making big moves included:

Apple rose $15.03, or 2.4 percent, to $649.79 after the company sent out invitations for an event next Tuesday where it is expected to announce a smaller iPad.

A123 Systems Inc., a maker of electric batteries for vehicles, put its U.S. operations into Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection and said its automotive assets will be acquired by Johnson Controls for $125 million. A123's stock plunged 18 cents to 6 cents.

LG&E speeds plan to shut down plant

LOUISVILLE — Louisville Gas and Electric Co. plans to shut down its Cane Run power plant in May 2015, eight months earlier than expected.

LG&E will replace it with a natural-gas-fired plant that will be built on the Cane Run property in Jefferson County.

According to The Courier-Journal company officials said they were able to accelerate the schedule because permits came through faster than expected.

The original plan was to close the existing plant and open the new one by 2016 to meet a clean-air deadline from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

LG&E spokesman Brian Phillips said Monday that the announcement's timing isn't related to any regulatory pressure.

Natural gas burns with less pollution than coal and doesn't produce combustion waste such as fly ash, making the new plant cleaner.

FCC: Cable can scramble all signals

NEW YORK — Federal regulators are letting cable companies scramble all their TV signals, closing a loophole that lets many households watch basic cable channels for free.

The Federal Communications Commission voted Friday to lift a ban on encryption of basic cable signals, saying it will reduce the number of visits by cable technicians to disconnect service and reduce cable theft.

Neither the FCC nor the National Cable & Telecommunications Association knows how many households are taking advantage of the unencrypted signals. NCTA spokesman Brian Dietz says most of the theft is by cable modem customers who also connect their line to a TV set.

Comcast Corp. and Time Warner Cable Inc., the two largest cable companies, could not say when they will start encrypting their basic signals.

Gasoline pushes consumer prices

WASHINGTON — Higher gas costs drove up U.S. consumer prices in September for the second straight month. Outside energy, there was little sign of inflation.

The Labor Department said Tuesday that the consumer price index rose a seasonally adjusted 0.6 percent last month, matching the August increase. In the past 12 months, prices have increased 2 percent. That's in line with the Federal Reserve's inflation target.

Excluding volatile food and energy costs, prices rose just 0.1 percent. In the past year, so-called core prices have increased 2 percent.

"Pump prices are fueling headline inflation, but underlying ... trends remain benign," Robert Kavcic, an economist at BMO Capital Markets, said in a note to clients.

Builder confidence at six-year high

LOS ANGELES — Confidence among U.S. homebuilders remains at its highest level in six years, reflecting improved optimism over the strengthening housing market this year and a pickup in visits by prospective buyers to builders' communities.

The National Association of Home Builders/Wells Fargo builder sentiment index released Tuesday rose to 41 this month, up from 40 in September. That's the highest reading since June 2006, just before the housing bubble burst.

Any reading below 50 indicates negative sentiment about the housing market. The index hasn't been above 50 since April 2006, the peak of the housing boom.

The survey is based on responses from 400 builders. It has been trending higher since last October, when the reading stood at 17. The index sank to 8, its lowest point dating back to 1985, in January 2008.

The price of cocoa surged 3 percent as positive signs for the U.S. economy raised hopes that consumers may splurge on more chocolate.

Cocoa for December delivery rose $64 to finish Tuesday at $2,418 per metric ton.

The price has fallen about 10 percent since hitting a 2012 high of $2,691 per metric ton on Sept. 6. That's because supplies have been plentiful and demand has been poor.

Investors have been growing more optimistic because of recent positive economic data in the U.S. and a rising stock market. "Looking ahead, we're looking for demand to steadily increase," Vision Financial Group analyst Boyd Cruel said.

The Labor Department said consumer prices rose 0.6 percent last month in large part because of higher gasoline prices. Overall, prices have increased 2 percent in a 12-month period that ended in September.

In addition, the National Association of Home Builders said its survey of builder confidence rose in October to the highest level since June 2006. But factory production increased just 0.2 percent last month, according to the Federal Reserve.

Now, investors will watch closely to see how holiday retail chocolate sales shape up. Much will depend on stronger economic growth in the U.S. and Europe because chocolate is a luxury, not a must-have item like gasoline or basic food products, said Spencer Patton, founder and chief investment officer of Steel Vine Investments LLC.

In other trading, commodities were mixed as investors sorted through a batch of mostly positive U.S. economic data.

Metals prices were mostly higher. In December contracts, gold rose $8.70 to finish at $1,746.30 per ounce, silver increased 21.6 cents to $32.959 per ounce and December palladium gained $6.35 to $638.95 per ounce.

December copper essentially was unchanged, ending down 0.15 cent at $3.70 per pound. January platinum rose $12.90 to $1,645.20 per ounce.

Benchmark oil rose 24 cents to finish at $92.09 per barrel, heating oil fell 1.06 cents to $3.1985 per gallon, wholesale gasoline decreased 0.5 cent to $2.8453 per gallon and natural gas dropped 4.9 cents to $3.437 per 1,000 cubic feet.

In agricultural crop contracts, December wheat fell 0.5 cent to end at $8.4775 per bushel, December corn rose 1 cent to $7.3825 per bushel and November soybeans gained 1.25 cents to $14.9375 per bushel.

Advice

Cancer diagnosis bring on intrusive queries

Dear Amy: My husband has been diagnosed with stage 4 cancer. His prognosis is not good. We have young children, and this has turned our world upside down. We've worked hard to keep things as normal as possible for our kids: We go to their concerts, sporting events and school events. At these events we try to forget the painful things and enjoy the moment.

I know people are well-meaning, but I am struggling with how to answer questions, especially those asked while I am with my kids or at their functions.

These inquiries usually come from "fringe friends" (versus my closest friends).

Some questions have been downright rude (asking about our financial situation or for more details of my husband's symptoms and treatment).

Others, I'm sure, come from a place of caring. However, when people ask, "How are your kids dealing with this?" and "How are you doing?" I really don't know what to say. I'm a pretty open person, and we have an online site to keep people informed of my husband's health.

But there are aspects of this journey that are personal. My children's suffering is not for public consumption.

Also, I will not compromise my husband's dignity by sharing too much of what he deals with. I don't know how to answer these questions without being rude. Of course I'm not "fine," but I certainly don't want to get into how difficult this battle is during one of my children's events.

What's the best way to handle these questions?

— Upset Wife

Dear Upset: My sympathy is with you and your family. I realize this is really tough, and these queries seem intrusive, but it is unreasonable to blame people for asking how your children are.

You are at a very tender part of your family's journey and may not realize how easily you could respond to these social queries.

All you need to say is, "The kids are OK; you're sweet to ask. How are yours doing?"

Your family's private and painful situation is not the business of people on the outer circles of your acquaintance.

However, some of these questions are not intended to get you to open up about your painful experience, but to register that people are thinking about you.

Think of these as statements of support rather than intrusive questions, and respond simply. Then move on.

Canned foods should be stored in cool, dry places

Dear Heloise: Is it safe to store canned foods in my garage? This past summer, the heat rose to 95 degrees F and higher in our area.

Does heat affect the contents? I am very concerned.

— Kay N. in California

Dear Kay: Although many people store canned foods in a garage, it is not safe to store cans in the garage, over a stove, under a sink, in a basement or in an outside shed.

The United States Department of Agriculture states that canned foods should be stored in a cool, dry place with no extremes of too-high or too-low (freezing) temperatures.

Any drastic changes in temperature can affect the can and the food itself. Try to keep all canned foods at or below 70 degrees F.

— Heloise

Dear Heloise: I buy dried fruit in the small, sturdy, reclosable packets. Being reclosable, they're great for olives, pickles and carrot sticks, or crackers and cookies in a brown-bag lunch or lunchbox. The bags can be tossed after one use or washed out and reused many times.

Seek God's strength, comfort to sustain you

Dear Dr. Graham: I have terrible pain all the time from a bad back, and the doctors can't seem to do anything about it (except to prescribe strong drugs, which I don't want to get hooked on).

What good is God to me, if He won't relieve my pain? Is it wrong for me to ask Him to take it away?

— J. McS.

Dear J. McS.: No, it isn't wrong for you to ask God to bring healing to your body and take away your pain. Chronic pain is a terrible burden, and the Bible encourages us to bring all our burdens to God in prayer.

But if your pain stays with you, I urge you not to get angry with God or turn away from Him in bitterness or disappointment.

Instead, I pray that your pain will cause you to turn toward God and draw closer to Him, so you can discover His strength and presence.

In spite of your present feelings about Him, God has not abandoned you; He loves you and wants to encourage you. The Bible's promise is true: "The Lord is near to all who call on him, to all who call on him in truth" (Psalm 145:18).

Think of it this way. In your letter, you mentioned that you are married, and although your wife can't take away your pain, her presence has been a source of great comfort and encouragement to you.

In a similar way, knowing that God cares for you and is constantly with you will bring you great comfort and encouragement.

Bring your burdens — including your pain — to Jesus, and ask Him to encourage you and help you keep your eyes on eternity.

The Bible says, "Cast your cares on the Lord and he will sustain you; he will never let the righteous fall" (Psalm 55:22).

Cervical cancer vaccine given early to help prevent HPV

Dear Drs. Donohue and Roach: I have twin daughters who are 11 years old. That's the age for the vaccine for cervical cancer. It sounds young to me. Can't they wait until they're older?

I worry that something serious might happen after the vaccine is given. It hasn't been around that long.

— R.R.

Dear R.R.: Most vaccines are given in infancy, so 11 years old isn't such a young age. The HPV (human papillomavirus vaccine, the cervical cancer vaccine) has been on the market for more than six years and had been studied carefully for many years before it was released to the general population.

In that time, more than 40 million youngsters have received it. Complications are exceedingly rare. The reason why the vaccine is targeted for 11- and 12-year-olds is that its effectiveness is reduced if a girl has already been infected with the human papillomavirus, the cause of cervical cancer.

HPV vaccine is also recommended for boys of the same age. Both vaccines still can be given up to age 26, but early immunization has the best chance for successful prevention.

The human papillomavirus has more than 100 different strains. Most of those strains cause only warts.

The strains involved with the greatest number of cervical cancers are 16 and 18, and both those strains are included in the vaccine.

These strains also are involved with cancers of the mouth, throat, anus, external female genitalia and the penis. Whether the vaccine prevents those cancers remains to be seen.

Genital warts result from other strains of this virus. The vaccine Gardasil also offers protection against two of the strains that are responsible for a large proportion of genital warts.

The HPV story is a complicated one. Most infections, both from the wart strains and cancer strains, clear without treatment within two years of infection.

However, when you consider that 11,000 cases of cervical cancer arise yearly, you can appreciate the value of this vaccine. Vaccines have contributed more to public health than almost any other intervention.

Horoscope

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY: (Oct. 17). You'll be magnificently attractive, but this does not automatically guarantee relationship satisfaction. Working to understand and please another will make you the perfect package. Finances improve over the next seven weeks. Make a play for the job you really want in December. There's domestic excitement in July. Sagittarius and Leo people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 4, 19, 25 and 38.

ARIES: (March 21-April 19). Just when you swore off excess, frivolity and unnecessary fluff, something glittery this way comes. Furthermore, you may not be able or willing to resist the sheen.

TAURUS: (April 20-May 20). A career breakthrough will happen because of dozens upon dozens of small but consistent actions. It may feel like nobody notices today, but that doesn't matter. You'll get your due props in the long run.

GEMINI: (May 21-June 21). You're not the only one who puts on a kind of act while having a difficult time relating to others. But you'll be the one to stop the show, discover the common ground and create a real connection.

CANCER: (June 22-July 22). Your water-sign nature is highlighted and will bring a wave of fun, a spritz of playfulness and a splash of drama to your scene. You'll be a hit with clients, partners and whomever you want to influence.

LEO: (July 23-Aug. 22). You want to know what someone is thinking, but asking directly won't be the way to find out. Indirect questions and rapport building will bring about more honesty.

VIRGO: (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). The difference between stubbornness and tenacity may be nonexistent. Just because someone doesn't like your persistence doesn't mean it's not working.

LIBRA: (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You will do some fancy footwork to avoid conflict. When you finesse your way out of a tight spot, it's not because you're afraid to fight; rather, it's because you are wise.

SCORPIO: (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). The void-of-course moon in your sign suggests a lazy feel to the morning. Unfortunately, your schedule may not agree with your mood, and you'll probably need an extra coffee to buzz through the malaise.

SAGITTARIUS: (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You'll find yourself in a situation that requires fast thinking. You don't want to lie, and yet brutal honesty would be cruel. Humor and levity are the ingredients that will rescue you.

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You don't want to be with people all of the time, but it's nice to have company when you're in the mood. Finding a balance in relationships will benefit your health.

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You'll be excavating in your closet, car trunk and other places where items have accumulated. When you get rid of what you don't want, you create a vacuum that pulls what you do want closer to you.

PISCES: (Feb. 19-March 20). Be careful not to define yourself in strict terms, because who you are is ever changing. As for what the others think, that's not up to you to decide and probably none of your business anyway.

Give old computers new life by donating them to Salvation Army

This weekly column is designed to help nonprofit community-service organizations in The Gleaner's coverage area with volunteers and donations.

To request a listing for your agency, to volunteer your help or for information about any of the items listed below, contact the Volunteer and Information Center at 831-2273.

VOLUNTEER

New Beginnings (formerly Rape Victims Services) needs volunteers in Henderson and Union counties to man the crisis hotline and to help with Medical Advocacy. No experience necessary, volunteers will be trained.

New Hope Animal Rescue needs volunteers to interact with the animals and walk dogs. For more information: Patti, 827-8088.

Big Brothers Big Sisters of Henderson County are in need of volunteers (BIGs) ages 16 and older to mentor youth in the Henderson community. A minimum of a one year commitment is required. There are currently more than 60 children waiting for a mentor. Information: Charlyn, 270-631-0738.

Matthew 25 is looking for volunteers to help with weeding and mulching their landscaping areas. This can be a single project or it can be done monthly depending upon the volunteer. It is a great project for youth groups or small clubs. Information: Sally or Dina, 826-0200.

GIVE

Volunteer and Information Center collects used ink jet and laser printer cartridges and unwanted cellular phones. Information: 831-2273

The Answer Center needs seasonal clothing, pots, pans, sheets of all sizes, bath and kitchen towels. For more information: Kathy, 827-9888 or at the Green Valley Baptist Association, 827-9867.

Independence Bank is collecting 1,000 pairs of shoes for the Soles 4 Souls program. The shoes can be new or used. These shoes will be sent to areas that have had a natural disaster or to countries where children live in hazardous conditions and have no shoes to protect their feet from disease and infection. Information: Contact any Independence Bank branch.

Truckers drive to better health at gym

By Jamie Stengle
Associated Press

DALLAS – In the months after Doug Robinson started driving a truck, he noticed his clothes were increasingly more snug-fitting. He was already overweight but soon realized that spending up to 11 hours behind the wheel, frequently eating fast food and not exercising was a poor combination.

When his employer, U.S. Xpress, took part in a weight-loss challenge sponsored by the Truckload Carriers Association, the 321-pound, 6-foot-1-inch Robinson signed up.

So far, he's about 40 pounds into his goal of dropping 100. His truck's refrigerator is stocked with chicken, tuna and vegetables. And after his day's drive, he walks — either on trails near rest stops or just circling his truck.

"I have asthma, so with the extra weight on there, it isn't good for me," said Robinson, a 30-year-old from Philadelphia. "When I started losing weight, instantly I was breathing better. I was sleeping better at night."

From trucking companies embracing wellness and weight-loss programs to gyms being installed at truck stops, momentum has picked up in recent years to help those who make their living driving big rigs get into shape.

"I think a lot of trucking companies are coming around to the idea that their drivers are their assets," said Boyd Stephenson of the American Trucking Associations, the industry's largest national trade association. He added that healthier employees help a company's bottom line.

There's an additional incentive for truckers to stay in shape — their job might depend on their health.

Every two years, they must pass a physical exam required by U.S. Department of Transportation's Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration. They're checked for conditions that might cause them to become incapacitated — suddenly or gradually — while driving, including severe heart conditions, high blood pressure and respiratory disorders.

While there are no weight restrictions, a commercial driver who has been diagnosed with obstructive sleep apnea and isn't undergoing treatment will not get a medical certificate. Sleep apnea, more common among those who are overweight, leads to daytime sleepiness, a danger on long drives.

But there are obstacles for truck drivers who are mindful of their health. In addition to being seated for many hours at a time, eating options are usually limited to places with parking lots big enough to accommodate their tractor-trailers — most often truck stops, which historically have not been known for wholesome food or workout equipment.

That's something truck stop chains have been trying to change.

TravelCenters of America, which operates under the TA and Petro Stopping Centers brands, launched a program two years ago called StayFit that includes placing small, free gyms in truck stops, offering healthier eating options and half portions, mapping walking routes near truck stops and building basketball courts in some locations.

"We wanted to remove as many barriers to drivers' health as possible," said TravelCenters spokesman Tom Liutkus, who said the company has gyms at 42 of its more than 240 locations, with plans to outfit them all by the end of next year. He added that the gyms have been accessed more than 30,000 times.

Gym franchiser Snap Fitness has partnered with Rolling Strong, which provides wellness programs aimed at truckers, to open gyms at Pilot Flying J locations. The first one opened south of Dallas in June: A nearly 1,000-square-foot stand-alone building filled with weights and a dozen or so machines. So far, more than 120 memberships have been sold for that gym.

"We know that we have an audience out there that needs help," said Snap Fitness chief executive officer and founder Peter Taunton. By the end of the year, they also plan to install gyms inside Pilot Flying J truck stops in Georgia and Tennessee.

Gym manager Rick Limitone demonstrates a work out machine at Snap Fitness Rolling Strong Gym, a truck stop gym in Dallas.

A monthly membership of about $30 also gives truckers access to Snap Fitness' more than 1,300 gyms, Taunton said, 60 of which have tractor trailer-friendly parking.

Pilot Flying J plans to add a function to their smartphone app to help truckers identify healthy food choices at their locations and fast food restaurants. David Parmly, the company's employee services manager, says their truck stops have adjusted recipes to make them healthier and offer oatmeal for breakfast.

Bob Perry, president of Rolling Strong, said truckers flock to daylong wellness screenings that his company sets up at truck stops nationwide.

"We never have to recruit anyone over. We are packed from the time we open till the time we leave," Perry said.

Bruce Moss, vice president of human resources for Con-way Freight, said they've found that their wellness program reduces the number of people who call in sick, lowers workplace injuries and controls health care costs. The program gives truckers access to wellness coaches and has them stretch before starting a shift.

Last year, more than 11,500 of Con-way Freight's 21,000 employees, the majority of them drivers, consulted with wellness coaches.

Teen awash in his own soap business

By Kendra Peek
Advocate-Messenger

DANVILLE, Ky. – Raising goats and making soap have become second nature for Joe Bremer. The 14-year-old Chicagoan-turned Danville resident launched his own soap-making business in 2010.

Joe's Bars and Suds began after many visits to a soap store in Tarpon Springs, Fla., which had "10 by 10 walls" full of soap. Bremer says they used a ladder there to reach the highest shelves.

"He figured if someone else could do it, and they made soap in ancient times from goat milk and olive oil, he could make soap. too," says Bremer's mother, Jackie.

Bremer kept after his parents to let him have a goat when they were living in Chicago, but there wasn't enough space to keep one. They also couldn't find a place to buy goat milk.

When they relocated to Kentucky, he tried to convince them to let him get a horse, then a cow. Of both animals, his mom said they simply didn't have enough land. Finally, he settled back on goats. This time, he got his wish.

He began showing goats when he was 11, through the help of organizations like the Boyle County Livestock Club and the Fort Harrod Goat Club.

As with his quest to get an animal, Bremer wanted to start making soap. He kept trying to convince his mom to let him and says "finally, I wore her down."

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Joe Bremer, 14, owner of Joe's Bars and Suds, works on goat-milk soap in Danville, Ky. The soap can be found in several area stores and on Facebook.

They got a book, titled "The Complete Idiot's Guide to Making Natural Soaps," and he began watching videos on YouTube.

He also joined the 4-H Means Business Club, which allows young entrepreneurs to bring their products to the meetings and use fellow members as a sounding board for ideas. In that club, he was able to develop his displays and his business.

When he was 14, Bremer and his mom went to Frankfort to register for his LLC. Because he was less than 18, he was unable to register as the business owner.

That visit to Frankfort is how he met the Kentucky Secretary of State, Alison Lundergran Grimes, who was so impressed by the youngster's determination that she had to buy some of his soap.

Bremer still has the money she paid him, as well as a photo taken of the two of them, which he has framed.

Since then, he has started distributing his soaps to various stores in Boyle County.

Currently, Joe's Bars and Suds products can be found in seven area stores: Maple Tree Gallery, Burkmann Feeds, The Medicine Shoppe, Sweet Suds and Tanning, Not Just Antiques, Muddy Creek Primitives and The Harvesters in Perryville.

According to Jackie, the local businesses have been willing to "give a kid a chance."

His mom jokes that, like a lot of farmers, Bremer has to have another job to help support his farming. "The money from the soap feeds the goats, buys the goats, and helps the health and welfare of the goats," she says.

The Bremers get their goat milk from Kreider Farms in Perryville. Local is important, which is why Bremer shops for as many of the ingredients as possible from local stores and farmers. They are also food-grade quality.

Joe's Bars and Suds soap is made using a "cold" process. The natural sugars in goat's milk, when mixed with heated lye, cause the soap to turn a brownish color. Using the cold process keeps this from happening.

"It makes lighter bars," Bremer said.

Getting local individuals, specifically local business owners, to give him a chance has made a difference. Allowing him to set up displays in their shops, has enabled Joe's Bars and Suds to expand into the community.

Woman who blamed fire on sleepwalking is charged

LEXINGTON – A Lexington woman who claims she accidentally set her apartment on fire while sleepwalking has been charged with first-degree arson and attempted murder.

The Lexington Herald-Leader reports that the fire broke out about 1 a.m. on Sept. 13 in the apartment where 41-year-old Lamonica Anganette Hill and her son were living. Hill initially told firefighters she was sleepwalking and had a dream about grilling.

But fire department officials say investigators found evidence that contradicted her story and indicated the fire was intentionally set.

Hill was arrested Monday without incident and was being held in the Fayette County jail.

Kentucky man accused of seeing 28 dentists for pills

LOUISVILLE – Louisville police have arrested a man accused of obtaining painkiller prescriptions from 28 dentists during a five-month period.

The Courier-Journal reports that 42-year-old Michael A. Osswald of Louisville has been charged with 22 counts of attempting to obtain or obtaining a controlled substance by fraud.

According to his arrest warrant, police believe Osswald went to the dentists complaining of pain in order to get prescriptions for Hydrocodone and Tramadol.

The warrant says he filled the prescriptions at several pharmacies, often going to the same pharmacies for duplicate orders.

Tornado, fire take 2 homes from man in 7 months

LONDON, Ky. – Jason Jackson hopes the fire that destroyed his house is the end of a streak of bad luck for him.

The Kentucky man told WYMT-TV in Hazard the fire last weekend took the second home in seven months from him.

A tornado that ripped through East Berndstadt in March wrecked his previous house.

Jackson and his two children escaped unhurt from the storm. The children weren't home when the second home went up in flames.

He's staying with a friend and starting over again.

INVITATION TO BID
The Housing Authority of Henderson will accept bids until November 13, 2012 at 2:00 p.m. for Sanitation Services. Bid packets will be available October 12, 2012 at 10:00 a.m. at the Barret Center, 111 S. Adams St., Henderson, KY 42420.

INVITATION TO BID

By West Kentucky Regional Industrial Development Authority, Inc., d/b/a Four Star Industrial Park, the Authority hereby solicits written sealed bids for an agricultural lease covering parcels of real property located in Henderson and Webster Counties, Kentucky, commonly referred to as the Four Star Industrial Park.

Sealed bids should be submitted and received by the West Kentucky Regional Industrial Development Authority, Inc., 145 N. Main Street, Suite 500, PO Box 674, Henderson, Kentucky 42419-0674, by Monday, November 5, 2012, at 10:00 a.m. The lease shall be a three-year agricultural lease, with all crops to be removed by December 31, on each of the years 2013, 2014, and 2015. The lease prohibits the planting of corn on some parcels. The agreement is also contingent upon appropriate maintenance and upkeep of property. Please contact 270-826-7505 or results@northwestky.com for a map of the available acreage and planting requirements. The sealed bids should be submitted as cash rent only on a per acre basis, separately itemized for each parcel. The lease shall include the option to renew for three one-year terms upon the mutual agreement of the parties. The successful bidder will be notified by the Authority after the opening of the bids. The Authority retains the right to reject any and all bids.

Today in history

Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, Oct. 17, the 291st day of 2012. There are 75 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 17, 1777, British forces under Gen. John Burgoyne surrendered to American troops in Saratoga, N.Y., in a turning point of the Revolutionary War.

On this date:

In 1912, Pope John Paul I was born Albino Luciani at Forno di Canale, Italy.

In 1931, mobster Al Capone was convicted of income tax evasion. (Sentenced to 11 years in prison, Capone was released in 1939.)

In 1933, Albert Einstein arrived in the United States as a refugee from Nazi Germany.

In 1989, an earthquake measuring 7.1 on the Richter scale struck northern California, killing 63 people and causing $6 billion worth of damage.

Five years ago: Comedian Joey Bishop, the last of Sinatra's Rat Pack, died in Newport Beach, Calif., at age 89. Singer Teresa Brewer died in New Rochelle, N.Y., at age 76.

One year ago: Rolling through small Southern towns in a campaign-style bus, President Barack Obama pressed lawmakers back in Washington to start taking up pieces of his rejected jobs bill and mocked the Republicans who had shot it down in toto. Financier Carl Lindner Jr., who used his experience running the family dairy store to build a business empire whose reach included baseball, banks and bananas, died at age 92.

Think about it

"The thinking of a genius does not proceed logically. It leaps with great ellipses. It pulls knowledge from God knows where." — Dorothy Thompson, American journalist (1894-1961).
